Sara McGee is running for State Representative in House District 132 in the 2026 November General Election. We reviewed her background to develop a comprehensive profile and to identify actions or positions which could be viewed negatively in a political campaign.

Section 1 (pp. 1-2) contains a professional timeline for Sara McGee. Section 2 (pp. 2-16) contains significant findings from our research. Section 3 (pp. 17-23) contains information on McGee’s personal and business background. Section 4 (pp. 24-228) contains our research exhibits and supporting documents.

Research methods and significant findings are summarized below.

I. Introduction and Professional Timeline for Sara McGee

Sara McGee is the Director of Radiology at Memorial Hermann hospital and has been a licensed medical radiologic technologist since 2006. She is now running for State Representative in House District 132 against incumbent Republican State Rep. Mike Schofield. While she claims she will reach out to the other side if she wins, she has been critical of talking to “MAGA” and even briefly left Twitter/X after it was purchased by Elon Musk.

McGee has compared abortion restrictions to slavery, opposes legislation keeping men out of women’s restrooms, opposes some efforts to deport violent criminal illegal aliens, opposes school choice, supports universal health care and an end to for-profit healthcare, and blames “unchecked capitalism” for lots of issues. She has also called for raising taxes by legalizing marijuana and gambling, as well as by expanding the gas tax. She has been sued multiple times for defaulting on her debts, as well as having had an HOA lien filed against her for defaulting on her assessments.

2022 - Present, Director of Radiology, Memorial Hermann

"I have spent the last 22 years in healthcare, and I currently serve as the Director of Radiology at a hospital in the Houston area." (Katy Times, pp. 25-29)

2020, Student, Midwestern State University

2006 – 2020, X-Ray Tech and Imaging Manager

"I graduated and my first job out of x-ray school was as an x-ray tech in a hospital working what they call a compressed weekend. I worked both Saturday and Sunday from 7:00a-11:00p for a total of 32 hours. Only, at $16.09 an hour, that wasn't enough to support my family. So I got an advanced certificate in Mammography and worked at a mammography clinic during the week. I did that for 4 years. 72 hours a week for 4 years. Then I was fortunate enough to be promoted into an Imaging Manager position. Not yet ready to slow down, I worked in that position as my day job, while also working at a free-standing ER as a CT/x-ray tech for a 12 hour shift each weekend." (X, p. 31)

October 2006, Licensed as a medical radiologic technologist. (TMB, p. 32)

2003, Enrolled in Radiology Technology program (X, p. 31)

1999 – 2002, Bartender

"From age 19-22 I was a bartender. I also got married and had two kids." (X, p. 31)

1997 – 1999, Server, Cracker Barrel

1996, Server, Schlotzsky's

1995, Server, Boston Market

"I got my first job at Boston Market on Fry Rd when I was 15. It's a McDonald's now, which is a shame, because I miss the sandwiches." (X, p. 31)

II. Significant Findings Regarding Sara McGee

Liberal and Progressive Positions

Sara McGee is the Democratic nominee for State Representative in House District 132. According to McGee, "I am a died in the wool DEMOCRAT. I align with 95% of the party platform... I support the Democratic platform. I believe the Democratic talking points. I am running to make sure we actually DELIVER on those promises." (X, p. 33)

As a candidate, McGee has compared abortion restrictions to slavery, opposes legislation keeping men out of women's restrooms, opposes some efforts to deport violent criminal illegal aliens, opposes school choice, supports universal health care and an end to for-profit healthcare, and blames "unchecked capitalism" for lots of issues.

Abortion

According to Sara McGee, she was inspired to run against State Rep. Mike Schofield in 2024, when he told her that exceptions to abortion for rape and incest couldn't be allowed. (X, p. 34) McGee takes a seemingly radical position on abortion claiming that restrictions are a violation of the 13th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which ended slavery.

McGee has criticized restrictions on abortion, claiming that forcing women to remain pregnant is a form of slavery:

"We are left with a grim and undeniable truth: forcing a woman to remain pregnant against her will is a form of modern-day slavery. This isn't hyperbole. It's a precise moral and legal observation rooted in the fundamental principles of human rights and personal liberty." (Substack, pp. 35-38)

And she compared it to chattel slavery in America:

"There is a chilling historical parallel here. During slavery in America, enslaved women were denied reproductive autonomy... They had no say in whether to become pregnant, carry to term, or keep their children. Their reproductive capacity was owned, controlled, and exploited. When modern laws force women to carry pregnancies they do not want, regardless of the circumstances, it is a continuation of this same logic..." (Substack, pp. 35-38)

On X, she claimed that abortion is a constitutional right due to the 13th Amendment:

"Abortion absolutely IS a Constitutional right. It was ratified in the 13th Amendment... Forcing a woman to use her body against her will for the benefit of another and at threat of punishment by the state is LITERALLY what the 13th Amendment states is illegal... You will NEVER be able to outlaw abortion. Only safe and medically supervised abortion. And all that leads to is women and children dying." (X, p. 39)

The 13th Amendment states:

"Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction."

She has called abortion restrictions "reproductive authoritarianism." (Substack, pp. 35-38)

Based on her view that abortion is like slavery, McGee wants to remove all abortion legislation:

Replace property taxes with revenue created from the tax placed on legalization of recreational marijuana.

Completely remove abortion legislation. Healthcare decisions are between a patient, their family and their treating physician. Government has no place in the exam room, period.

3:16 PM · Dec 16, 2024 · 1,033 Views

Arguing for removing abortion restrictions, she compared pregnancy to forced kidney harvesting:

"You can't remove someone else's inalienable rights to do that [i.e., protect a life.] What's next? Forced kidney harvesting because your kidney could save another person's life? Your rights end where mine begin." (X, p. 40)

In July 2025, she compared Texas' abortion laws to those in Afghanistan, Libya, Somalia, Syria, and Yemen, saying: "What a weird list for our state lawmakers to want us to be on." (X, p. 41)

Later she advised Texas women:

"Women in Texas: Unless you are actively trying to become a parent, under no circumstances should you consent to sex with a man in this state. Shut it down." (X, 42)

Border Security and Immigration

Sara McGee questioned the Houston police department's cooperation with ICE:

If ICE is so effective, why do they need access to our limited local police resources to do their job?

The City of Houston had recently passed an ordinance to limit the police department's cooperation with ICE. Gov. Greg Abbott threatened to pull $110 million in public safety grants if the city did not repeal the new policy, and the city eventually repealed the ordinance.

In a Substack blog post in June 2025, she blamed the United States for creating crises that cause people to seek entry into the country:

"Many of the people arriving at our border today are not just fleeing random chaos - they're fleeing crises that the United States helped create. Gang violence, corruption, and poverty in the region didn't emerge in a vacuum—they're deeply tied to American foreign policy and economic exploitation. When these people seek asylum or safety, it is not just a humanitarian plea—it is, in many ways, a bill coming due." (Substack, pp. 43-47)

When President Trump attempted to use the Alien Enemies Act to deport Venezuelan gang members, McGee said: "It's a wartime act. We have not declared war on Venezuela. Therefore, the use of the order was illegal. Hope that helps!" (X, p. 48)

When former National Security Advisor Mike Flynn suggested sending the gang members to McGee's neighborhood, she said: "Maybe they should just follow the constitution and due process, you unpatriotic scum bag." (X, p. 49)

Multiple cases have challenged the President's use of the Alien Enemies Act. In September 2025, a three-judge panel of the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that Pres. Trump could not use the Alien Enemies Act to deport Venezuelan gang members:

"In a 2-1 ruling, the judges said they granted the preliminary injunction sought by the plaintiffs because they 'found no invasion or predatory incursion' in this case... The majority opinion said Trump's allegations about Tren de Aragua did not meet the historical levels of national conflict that Congress intended for the act." (Associated Press, pp. 50-54)

In a dissenting opinion, Judge Andrew Oldham said, "The majority's approach to this case is not only unprecedented—it is contrary to more than 200 years of precedent." (Associated Press, pp. 50-54)

The Supreme Court had earlier allowed the President to use the Act, provided the deportees received a court hearing:

"The Supreme Court on Monday allowed the Trump administration to use an 18th century wartime law to deport Venezuelan migrants, but said they must get a court hearing before they are taken from the United States. In a bitterly divided decision, the court said the administration must give Venezuelans who it claims are gang members 'reasonable time' to go to court." (Associated Press, pp. 55-59)

Further on the issue of Venezuela, she said the U.S. military was killing fisherman – referring to strikes on alleged Venezuelan drug boats:

The United States military is murdering Venezuelan fishermen but it's ok because Obama wore a tan suit that one time.

Three days before McGee's comment, it was reported that the U.S. Navy had struck a semi-submersible vessel and later rescued two survivors:

"U.S. President Donald Trump on Friday confirmed a U.S. military strike on an alleged 'drug-carrying submarine' in the Caribbean amid reports the military is holding two survivors aboard a navy ship after its strike killed two others... One of the sources said the vessel struck on Thursday moved below the water and was possibly a semi-submersible, which is a submarine-like vessel used by drug traffickers to avoid detection." (CBC, pp. 60-63)

Gender Issues

In June 2026, Sara McGee wrote that issue of boys in girls sports and bathrooms is a distraction from real issues. She said, "A national crisis has been manufactured around an issue that affects a statistically tiny number of people." (Substack, pp. 64-67) In particular, McGee is an opponent of legislation preventing biological men from using women's restrooms.

During the 2025 special session, Austin attorney Adam Loewy was commenting on the debate over Senate Bill 8 (89-2), which requires government facilities to designate restrooms, locker rooms, etc. to be based on biological sex. He said: "Do women have the right to their own spaces without biological males in them? This has been the assumption historically until the last 15 years."

McGee responded and said:

"There is a serious constitutional issue with enforcement of a law based solely on how someone thinks someone else looks... Look, I get the sentiment - I really do. But there is no legal way to enforce this without violating privacy laws. Over my dead body will someone drag me to court and force me to prove my birth sex just for going to the bathroom. This IS still America, right? It's asinine and only written to play to an emotional base." (X, p. 68)

In defending her position, she has referenced her experience in Toronto. In February 2025, she wrote:

"I was in Toronto in November for a concert. The bathrooms were gender neutral. For half a second when I realized that I was standing in line with men I paused. Then I realized, oh ok, they're cool here... No one is looking at, or thinking about, what genitals are behind those doors. Except for maybe MAGA, I guess, who have made it their life mission to be the genital police?" (X, p. 69)

She then referenced sexual abuse by her stepfather:

"Don't let any of this distract you from the fact that the real predators are straight men. I was molested by my stepfather for an entire year, who was a deacon at the First Baptist Church in Katy, and I promise you - he never tried to use a women's restroom." (X, p. 69)

Responding to a comment on her post she said: "I feel infinitely more at ease with a trans woman than I do with a straight man." (X, p. 70)

She has also asserted that children who are transitioning are born that way rather than being groomed:

"Miss me with the 'grooming' nonsense. Any teacher who has a picture of themselves and their spouse displayed in their classroom, or who tells stories about their husband or wife, has proclaimed to their students what their relationship preferences are. No one calls it grooming when it matches your preconceived notion of what their relationship preferences nuclear family should look like. Children aren't in danger. They just want to be who they are, dress how they want to dress, love who they want to love and just pursue happiness in this life." (X, p. 71)

In January 2026, she wrote: "I am 45 years old. If sexuality were a choice, I would've made the conversion long ago." (X, p. 72)

In September 2025, she said that the FBI creating a domestic threat label for transgender inspired violence in response to Charlie Kirk's assassination was fascism:

Sara McGee for Texas HD 132 ✓
@SaraForTexLege

This is fascism.

Allow me to say it louder.

THIS IS FASCISM.

School Choice

Sara McGee opposes school choice:

"School vouchers, like our broken healthcare system, are yet another way that the GOP has devised to convert public tax payer funds into private profit. Adding a layer of profit to a public system has never improved it - it has only led to services that are more expensive and lower quality. The same thing will happen with education if we do not stop vouchers before they start." (Lone Star Left, pp. 73-78)

In March 2026, she wrote:

"End the voucher program and put that money back in public schools. The ESA program was built to reward out-of-state billionaire donors, not Texas kids. Up to 20% of funds can flow to families already making $160,000 a year. Private schools that take the money face no real accountability... Repeal the voucher program and redirect every dollar back into the public schools that serve 90% of Texas kids..." (Substack, pp. 79-87)

Later in March, she wrote:

"The voucher pitch has always insulted my intelligence. We are told this is about freedom, competition, and helping kids... So the state somehow has money to build a taxpayer-funded pipeline into private education, but we are still supposed to believe there is never enough money for the public schools that take everybody." (Substack, pp. 88-94)

She has blamed Tim Dunn and Farris Wilks' (large donors to Republican candidates and PACs) theological politics for vouchers/school choice:

"Public education is where this movement may have finally overreached... The Dunn-Wilks political network and its allies pushed aggressively for vouchers while simultaneously undermining trust in public education itself..." (Substack, pp. 95-105)

Unchecked Capitalism

On her Substack blog, Sara McGee has written multiple posts about how “unchecked capitalism” causes things like obesity, declining birth rates, housing shortages, food insecurity and other issues:

McGee defines “unchecked capitalism” as “minimal regulation and relentless profit maximization.” (Substack, pp. 106-109) McGee says the way to solve “unchecked capitalism” involves:

- “Investing in people with universal healthcare, strong public education, and affordable childcare - so that businesses are not burdened with these costs and workers aren't crushed by them.”
- “Modernizing taxes so the largest corporations and wealthiest individuals contribute their fair share instead of exploiting loopholes.”

She said, “These measures don't kill capitalism. They keep it alive.” (Substack, pp. 110-112)

She attributes housing shortages to private equity and hedge funds snapping up homes and converting them to rental properties, then suggests housing should be treated as a right, not a commodity: “Instead of treating housing as a human right, the U.S. treats it as a commodity - one that is increasingly out of reach for working families.” (Substack, pp. 113-117)

She attributed male loneliness to “unchecked capitalism” and identified a cure:

“The path forward lies in rebuilding social infrastructure: supporting unionization, investing in mental health, making housing more affordable, and creating community spaces where men can form genuine, non-transactional relationships. It means embracing new models of masculinity — ones rooted in empathy, interdependence, and equality.” (Substack, pp. 118-121)

She supports increasing the minimum wage:

“Texans are struggling. Minimum wage was created to ensure that companies were not exploiting workers. Increases have been avoided for decades to allow the ‘free market’ to work - it has failed. Texans are working 2-3 jobs just to make ends meet and that is inexcusable.” (Lone Star Left, pp. 73-78)

Universal Healthcare

She supports universal healthcare, calling it morally urgent:

“Implementing universal healthcare in the United States—particularly through a single-payer model like Medicare for All—has the potential to transform not only the nation's health outcomes but also its economic future... [It]—represents a rare policy opportunity that is both economically sound and morally urgent.” (Substack, pp. 122-126)

She has also called healthcare a human right and wants to outlaw for-profit healthcare entities

Sara McGee For Texas @sarafortexas.bsky.social · Dec 5, 2024

Universal healthcare is a political non-starter in our current American environment. But the conversation that we need and SHOULD start is outlawing for-profit healthcare entities. Healthcare isn't a business. No one should ever profit on the back of someone else dying. Healthcare is a human right.

Wow. Great virtue signal. You are so brave. Bravo. People need insurance, Sara. They need it to pay for healthcare. We don't have public insurance in the US, so we rely on private insurance. Tell me, do not-for-profit companies have infinite money? Do they ever turn people down?

Sara McGee For Texas @sarafortexas.bsky.social · Dec 11, 2024

I'm afraid you've completely misunderstood what I said. No one should be allowed to profit from providing healthcare, insurance or otherwise.

Criticizing the for-profit healthcare system in March 2025, she wrote:

"I am so over hearing that this is the price of 'choice'... So when people talk about 'market competition' in health care, I need them to explain what that means in an actual town, with actual people, where there is one hospital or none at all. Explain to me how somebody is supposed to 'shop around' while having chest pain... That entire argument only works if you never picture a real human being inside it." (Substack, pp. 88-94)

Legalizing Marijuana, Casinos, and Increasing Taxes

Sara McGee advocates for legalizing marijuana, sports betting and casinos to expand tax revenue, and she has also advocated for increasing or expanding several taxes, including the gas tax.

She supports legalizing marijuana and believes that tax revenue from legalized marijuana (along with casino revenues) could help lower or even replace property taxes:

"Legalizing cannabis in Texas could yield over $500 million in tax revenue and $75–$150 million in enforcement savings annually. While these numbers won't eliminate property taxes, they could support meaningful reductions—especially in high-tax areas or underfunded districts." (Substack, pp. 127-132)

Her plan for reducing property taxes also calls for authorizing casinos and mobile betting "with tightly regulated tax regimes." (Substack, pp. 133-137) On her campaign website, she said:

"Legalizing sports betting would bring in millions in tax revenue—funds we could use to boost education, infrastructure, and public safety... Opponents might worry about addiction, but we've got the tools to regulate it right—age checks, limits, and support programs. It's not about gambling; it's about freedom, economic growth, and giving Texans what they want." (Campaign Issues, pp. 138-139)

According to the Harvard Gazette, gambling addiction has risen with the increase in online sports betting, causing savings rates to go down and credit card defaults to rise. Prof. Malcolm Sparrow said:

"When new forms of gambling appear, the rate of savings go down, then you see the rate of credit card defaults going up. And you see the rate of mortgage defaults going up. So these are long-term financial and societal costs with broad implications."
(Harvard Gazette, pp. 140-144)

And multiple studies have shown that crime increases around casinos, particularly aggravated assault, robbery, and burglary. For example, a 2006 study "documented that counties that open casinos have crime rates about eight percentage points higher than their counterparts that do not open a casino." (Review of Economics and Statistics, pp. 145-147) And a 2021 study concluded that "problem gambling" [an addiction to gambling] is associated with elevated crime around casinos. (University of Illinois Law Review, pp. 148-150)

In addition to legalizing these vices to expand the tax base, she wants to increase existing taxes:

- "Incrementally raise state sales tax from 6.25% to 7.25%" (maybe even to 8.25%)
- "Broaden tax base to include luxury services"
- "Increase sin taxes by: $1/pack tobacco; 20% tax on vaping products; 10–15% increase on liquor/beer excise taxes" (Substack, pp. 133-137)

She has also suggested expanding the gas tax: "Some ideas that I have included in my outline beyond cannabis legalization and online sports betting are: Expanded gas tax (15 cents per gallon) - that will be a TOUGH sell." In the same post, she also proposed a carbon tax credit as an alternative source of revenue. (X, p. 151)

Treatment of People with Opposing Views

In May 2026, Sara McGee told the Katy Times: "House District 132 is a swing district. If given the opportunity to serve, my very first move would be to reach out to the voters for whom I was not their first choice." (Katy Times, pp. 25-29)

Except that on Bluesky, she posted that it was impossible to speak to "MAGA" individuals:

Then in July 2025, she used her Substack blog to criticize Mattress Mack, claiming he betrayed everything he stood for because he was starting the Harris County MAGA PAC:

"For decades, Jim 'Mattress Mack' McIngvale has been the heartbeat of Houston... Which is why it feels like a punch to the gut to see you now. This week, you announced you're starting a MAGA PAC. And alongside that, you told struggling Texans that their pain comes down to one thing: they just aren't working hard enough. Mack, this isn't leadership. Its cruelty wrapped in a folksy slogan. And it is a betrayal of everything you used to stand for." (Substack, pp. 152-154)

X/Twitter, Elon Musk and Threat to Democracy

In 2024, Sara McGee joined Bluesky – an alternative to Twitter, which had just been purchased by Elon Musk. McGee fantasized about the demise of Twitter, saying that its collapse would be the best thing to happen for democracy. She also suggested Elon Musk's Tesla was bad for democracy.

However, she has been a prolific poster on X. As of June 26, 2026, she had over 23,000 posts on the platform. Over on Bluesky, she attempted to justify her return to X:

Financial Issues: Liens and Judgments

Sara McGee has been sued multiple times for defaulting on debts, assessments, and tolls. She also had an HOA lien filed against her for defaulting on her HOA payments.

In June 2005, a judgment was filed against McGee by the Williamsburg Parish Maintenance Association in the amount of $753 plus attorney fees. The judgment resulted from a debt case against McGee in 2004 in which she was sued by the Williamsburg Parish Maintenance Association for failure to pay her annual assessment. (Harris County, pp. 155-158)

In 2005, McGee was sued by Jeffrey Hirt in Harris County Precinct Court 5-2. He received a judgment against her for $3,400 plus attorney fees. Jeffrey Hirt was her attorney in her divorce from Richard Heinen; that case is discussed further below. (Harris County, p. 159)

In October 2009, McGee was sued by the Fort Bend County Toll Road Authority. According to the agreed order, McGee owed $762.80 in delinquent toll road fees, and there was a settlement amount owed of $392.80 to be paid out monthly at $43.65. (Fort Bend County, pp. 160-161) The Fort Bend

Toll Road Authority sued McGee again in February 2021 for $1,192.16 in unpaid tolls and fees. McGee did not appear for the hearing and was ordered to pay the total amount due. (Fort Bend County, pp. 162-164)

In May 2016, an HOA lien was filed against McGee by the Parkway Katy Homeowners Association for $937, after she defaulted on payments for assessments. Another HOA lien was filed in July 2017 – also by the Parkway Katy HOA – for $580. (Fort Bend County, pp. 165-166)

In 2019, McGee was sued by Midland Funding LLC resulting in a default judgment in favor of Midland of $4,484.83. (Fort Bend County, p. 167)

In March 2020, she was sued by Credit Corp Solutions for default on a credit account. A default judgment was issued in favor of Credit Corp Solutions in the amount of $1,552.79 in 2021; the judgment was satisfied in August 2025. (Fort Bend County, pp. 168-171)

In February 2021, McGee was sued by Cavalry SPV – an assignee of Citibank – for an unpaid debt totaling $3,170.26. A default judgment was issued in favor of Cavalry. (Fort Bend County, pp. 172-176)

Threatening to Leave the State Over Elections

Prior to the primary runoff election, Sara McGee threatened to leave the state if Ken Paxton was elected by a double-digit margin. On May 24, 2026, she posted:

“If Paxton +10 is what my state has become, then I no longer belong in this state. On the record - if Ken ‘pedophile plea deal’ Paxton wins Texas by a +10 margin, then I will find a place in America, or possibly abroad, where the electorate still has an ounce of common decency.” (X, p. 177)

According to the Houston Chronicle:

“McGee later clarified in a reply to another user on X that she was referring to both the runoff and the general election, effectively doubling down on her frustration with the state's political direction.” (Houston Chronicle, pp. 178-179)

However, she told the Chronicle:

“If I win my election, I'm absolutely staying here to represent my community. That's the only thing that could possibly change Texas, and we especially need to try to get the majority in the Texas House, because you know they're going to redistrict again after the recent Voting Rights Act ruling.” (Houston Chronicle, pp. 178-179)

Criticizing both Cornyn and Paxton, she said: “It's Talarico or bust here in Texas.” (Houston Chronicle, pp. 178-179)

And this is apparently not the first time she has contemplated leaving the state. In December 2024, she posted on Bluesky that one of her thoughts after the 2024 election was about leaving the country, including looking up moving to Australia. (Bluesky, p. 180)

In March 2026, she said:

“Pending the outcome of the midterm elections, women in America should really consider saving and researching immigration to a country that doesn’t all out hate women like Republicans do. For the love of God, just leave us alone.” (X, p. 181)

Marriages and Divorces

Sara McGee became pregnant at a young age. She ultimately chose to marry the father of her child; however, they were divorced several months later. She married again in 2015; however, within a few months, she sought and received an annulment, claiming he used fraud to induce her to marry him. Then, it appears she married the same man again in 2021, according to a divorce filing in 2023. Adding to the confusion is that it appears the 2023 divorce was not finalized.

Describing her background, Sara McGee posted: “From age 19-22 I was a bartender. I also got married and had two kids. At 23, I was divorced with 2 small children and at a crossroads.” (X, p. 31)

While working as a bartender, McGee became pregnant and gave birth to a baby boy, Cameron Joseph Heinen in August 2001. In January 2002, she sued Richard Heinen for paternity in Harris County and filed a temporary restraining order to keep Heinen from the child. In March 2002, the court issued an order of parentage, establishing Richard as the father and appointing him and Sara as joint conservators of Cameron. (Harris County, p. 182)

Following the suit, she married Richard Heinen in August 2002 (Harris County, p. 183), and the couple had another child in February 2003. However, by September 2003, she had filed for divorce from Heinen. A final decree was issued in June 2004. (Harris County, pp. 184-186) According to McGee, she divorced Heinen “because my ex beat me to the point of hospitalization when I was pregnant with our daughter.” (X, p. 187)

Then in May 2015, McGee married Ryan Keith Reed in Fort Bend County. (Fort Bend County, p. 188) By September 2015, she filed for an annulment of the marriage. According to the filing, she accused Reed of using “fraud, duress, or force to induce me to marry and I have not voluntarily lived with the Respondent since learning of the fraud or being released from the duress or force.” The annulment was granted in November 2015. (Fort Bend County, pp. 189-194)

However, in June 2023, McGee filed for divorce in Waller County against Reed. The divorce petition states that they were married on or about March 3, 2021 and ceased to live together in November 2022. Online searches in the surrounding counties and Las Vegas did not reveal a marriage license in 2021. This divorce was nonsuited in August 2023. (Waller County, pp. 195-198)

In November 2024 Sara Ann McGee took out a protective order against Ryan Reed in Harris County, and the order was signed in February 2025. (Harris County, pp. 199-200) Online searches did not reveal another divorce on file for these parties or a finalized divorce for these parties.

III. Personal and Related Entity Records

Driver's Licenses, National Report and Address History

A driver's license record was found for Sara McGee, DOB September 23, 1980. The address listed on the license is 31311 Greenville Creek Ln, Hockley, TX 77447. TDL records show she has lived in Hockley since at least 2024; previous addresses were found in Katy in 2019 and Brookshire in 2023. (TDL, p. 201)

A report from the State of Texas "Who Represents Me?" (pp. 202-203) website shows the target's current address is located within Congressional District 38, State Senate District 18, State House District 132, and State Board of Education District 8.

A National Database Report was run on Sara McGee to gather general information including current address, address history, date of birth, aliases, and phone numbers. In some cases (depending on jurisdiction) driver's license records, professional licenses, real properties, deeds transfers, vehicles, bankruptcies, liens, judgments, DEA controlled substance license, FAA aircraft registrations, FAA pilot license, boat registrations, federal firearms and explosives licenses, concealed carry permits, hunting and fishing licenses, corporate affiliations, and UCC lien filings will also appear on national reports.

National reports are not official records and can contain errors. For that reason, the reports are used for leads only and are not included as an exhibit to this report.

The report for McGee revealed liens, judgments and criminal cases. These issues are discussed further in Section 2 and Section 3 of this report.

Related Entities Search Results

Secretary of State corporate records and assumed name ("DBA") records were searched to create a list of entities where Sara McGee was an officer or held a significant interest.

Texas Secretary of State (SOS) records were searched for any incorporated businesses for which Sara McGee is identified as an officer, director, or registered agent, or where there is other information linking the target to a corporation. Additional records relating to corporations, including grantor/grantee indexes, appraisal district records, case inventories, liens and judgments, are also included when found. An online search revealed no corporations where McGee was identified as an officer, director or registered agent.

One assumed name was found for McGee in Harris County:

- Rule of Faith Ministries was an assumed name in August 1995 as a general partnership with Brandon Thompson and John Cordes. According to the filing, the assumed name would expire in 2 years. It was withdrawn in September 1995. (Harris County, pp. 204-205)

Federal, State and County Records Search for Sara McGee

District and County records in Fort Bend County, Harris County, and Waller County were searched for Civil and Criminal matters where Sara McGee appears as a party. The time period covered in these searches is 1980 to the present. Records searched include: voter history, marriage and divorce, real property, grantor/grantee, tax liens, judgments, assumed names, property appraisals, and civil and criminal cases.

Grantor/grantee reports were run for Sara McGee in Fort Bend County. Grantor/grantee reports can include liens and judgments, along with typical property-related and other listings. The reports for McGee included deed records, modifications, notices, and an affidavit. (Fort Bend County, pp. 206-207) Additionally, the report revealed HOA liens, a hospital lien, and a judgment.

- In May 2016, an HOA lien was filed against McGee by the Parkway Katy Homeowners Association for $937, after she defaulted on payments for assessments. Another HOA lien was filed in July 2017 – also by the Parkway Katy HOA – for $580. Online searches did not reveal a release of these liens. (Fort Bend County, pp. 165-166)
- A judgment was filed against McGee in August 2023 resulting from a debt case in the amount of $3,170 plus court costs and interest. This case is discussed further in Section 2 of this report. (Fort Bend County, pp. 172-176)
- In January 2003, a hospital lien was filed by Memorial Hermann Katy Community Hospital. According to the lien, McGee was involved in an accident caused by another person on November 30, 2002. The lien was for the amount of the hospital charges in case of any lawsuit brought against the responsible party. (Fort Bend County, p. 208)

Grantor/grantee reports were run for Sara McGee in Harris County. The reports revealed deed records, releases, notices, and a power of attorney. (Harris County, pp. 209-219) The report also revealed judgments against McGee:

- In June 2005, a judgment was filed against McGee by the Williamsburg Parish Maintenance Association in the amount of $753 plus attorney fees. The judgment resulted from a debt case against her in 2004. This case is discussed further in Section 2 of this report. (Harris County, pp. 155-158)
- In March 2005, a judgment was filed against McGee by Jeffrey Hirt in the amount of $3,400 plus attorney fees. (Harris County, p. 159)

Grantor/grantee reports were run for Sara McGee in Waller County. Online searches did not reveal records for McGee there.

In Fort Bend County, civil cases were searched online for Sara McGee. On the County and District Court level, 5 civil cases were found involving her as a defendant:

- In October 2009, McGee was sued by the Fort Bend County Toll Road Authority. According to the agreed order, McGee owed $762.80 in delinquent toll road fees, and there was a settlement amount owed of $392.80 to be paid out monthly at $43.65. (Fort Bend County, pp. 160-161)
- In 2019, McGee was sued by Midland Funding LLC resulting in a default judgment in favor of Midland of $4,484.83. (Fort Bend County, p. 167)
- In March 2020, she was sued by Credit Corp Solutions for default on a credit account. A default judgment was issued in favor of Credit Corp Solutions in the amount of $1,552.79 in 2021; the judgment was satisfied in August 2025. (Fort Bend County, pp. 168-171)

- The Fort Bend Toll Road Authority sued McGee again in February 2021 for $1,192.16 in unpaid tolls and fees. McGee did not appear for the hearing, and she was ordered to pay the full amount owed. (Fort Bend County, pp. 162-164)
- In February 2021, McGee was sued by Cavalry SPV – an assignee of Citibank – for an unpaid debt totaling $3,170.26. A default judgment was issued in favor of Cavalry. (Fort Bend County, pp. 172-176)

In Harris County, civil cases were searched online for McGee. On the County and District Court level, 1 civil case was found involving McGee as a defendant. She was sued by the Williamsburg Maintenance Association for failure to pay her annual assessment. A default judgment was issued in favor of the association for $753 plus attorney fees totaling $1,619. (Harris County, pp. 155-158)

One criminal case was found for McGee in Harris County. She was charged with DWI in October 2000. According to the charge, she operated a vehicle in a public place with a BAC of at least 0.08. She pled guilty and received 1 year of probation. (Harris County, pp. 222-228)

A nationwide search of Federal level criminal, civil and bankruptcy cases was conducted to identify cases involving Sara McGee. An online search revealed no cases where McGee was named as a defendant or plaintiff.

One marriage record was found for McGee in Harris County. In August 2002, she married Richard Joseph Heinen. (Harris County, p. 183)

One marriage record was found for McGee in Fort Bend County. She married Ryan Keith Reed in May 2015. (Fort Bend County, p. 188)

Two divorce records and an annulment were found for Sara McGee in Fort Bend County, Harris County, and Waller County:

- In September 2003, she filed for divorce from Richard Heinen. A final decree was issued in June 2004. (Harris County, pp. 184-186)
- In September 2015, she filed for an annulment of her marriage to Ryan Keith Reed. According to the filing, she accused Reed of using “fraud, duress, or force to induce me to marry.” The annulment was granted in November 2015. (Fort Bend County, pp. 189-194)
- In June 2023, McGee filed for divorce in Waller County against Reed. The divorce petition states that they were married on or about March 3, 2021 and ceased to live together in November 2022. This divorce was nonsuited in August 2023. (Waller County, pp. 195-198)

A property appraisal was found for Sara McGee’s home at 31311 Greenville Creek Ln, Hockley, TX. It is assessed for tax purposes at $364,452. There is a homestead exemption on this property. (Harris County, p. 220) Tax assessor records indicate the property taxes have been paid on time.

A voter history record for Sara McGee was obtained through an unofficial party database. McGee’s earliest vote shown on the report is in the 2006 November General Election. Her most recent vote is in the 2025 November General Election. McGee voted in November general elections in 2006, 2008, 2012, 2016, 2018, 2020, and 2024. The record did not reveal primary voting history for McGee prior to 2026. (Voter History, p. 221)

A search of Texas Ethics Commission records revealed 18 contributions by McGee from 2000 through the present, totaling $1,906. These were made to Democrat and liberal groups:

She has posted 257 times; her first tweet was made in November 2024, and her most recent tweet was made on May 28, 2026. Her posts are about her campaign for state representative and her position on issues such as abortion, public education funding, and health care. Some of her posts are discussed further in Section 2 of this report.

Conclusion

Sara McGee is the Director of Radiology at Memorial Hermann hospital and has been sued multiple times for defaulting on her debts. She is now running for State Representative in House District 132. McGee said she inspired to run against State Rep. Mike Schofield in 2024, when he told her that exceptions to abortion for rape and incest couldn’t be allowed.

McGee has taken a number of positions that could be viewed negatively in a general election, including comparing abortion restrictions to slavery, opposing legislation keeping men out of women's restrooms, opposing some efforts to deport violent criminal illegal aliens, opposing school choice, supporting universal health care and an end to for-profit healthcare, and blaming "unchecked capitalism" for lots of issues. She also supports expanding the gas tax.

Thank you for the opportunity to submit this Executive Summary. We look forward to any questions or comments that you may have.

By Susan Rovegno, Publisher

In the general election on November 3, 2026, voters in the greater Katy area will have the opportunity to choose their representative for Texas House of Representatives District 132. Incumbent Mike Schofield (Republican) is facing newcomer Sara McGee (Democrat) in the race for the office. Earlier this spring, The Katy Times provided a questionnaire to both candidates, allowing several weeks for their responses, which are shown below. As the incumbent, Schofield will give his responses to each question first.

*Briefly describe your background and your qualifications to represent the greater Katy area in the Texas house.

SCHOFIELD: Prior to running for the House, I worked directly with the legislature for six sessions for then-Governor Rick Perry. I saw first-hand that we need legislators who are more interested in finding solutions for problems in our growing state than in making noise on social media. As a result of my experience, I have a thorough understanding of how Texas government really works. In my five terms representing our area in the House I have learned how to put that knowledge to work to serve our community. For example, I wrote the law that stops Harris County from cutting off our neighborhoods' police patrol contracts with the sheriff and constable. Too often, government acts as if it is more entitled to your money than you are, and knows how you should live better than you do. I know that you don't exist to serve the government, your government exists to serve you. To that end, I wrote the constitutional amendment to ensure that you won't ever have to pay a Texas income tax, and have worked diligently to cap the amount local governments can raise your property taxes.

MCGEE: I was born in Texas and have lived in this district since I was 3 years old. I grew up here, went to Katy ISD schools, raised my children here, and built my career here. I have spent the last 22 years in healthcare, and I currently serve as the Director of Radiology at a hospital in the Houston area. This brings a particularly strong knowledge base around healthcare policy, how it has shaped our current healthcare landscape, and how that landscape can be improved. I have spent several years focused on the intrusion of school vouchers into the state and how their proliferation will be incredibly detrimental for public education systems in Katy and throughout the state. Since announcing my campaign 18 months ago, I have had the opportunity to meet with current legislators and industry experts around everything from energy and public safety planning to expanding access to sidewalks and parks.

*What are your plans for your first 100 days in office and what top priority bills do you plan to introduce?

SCHOFIELD: I will continue to fight to protect our neighborhoods (and your ability to afford to continue to live here) by filing bills to lower our property taxes, protect us from crime by requiring that violent criminals remain in jail, and to ensure that data centers don't harm our quality of life by requiring them to be built far away from residential areas, mandating that they build their own plants to provide all the electricity they need and limit the amount of water they can use, so they don't use so much water that they hurt the ability of the rest of us to have the water we need or cause our water bills to rise. This can include requiring them to create their own desalination capability or to convert to air cooling rather than water as that technology develops.

MCGEE: House District 132 is a swing district. If given the opportunity to serve, my very first move would be to reach out to the voters for whom I was not their first choice. It is important to me that the citizens of Katy and Cypress know that, while I am a Democrat, I do not plan to govern strictly along party lines if there is something that does or does not make sense for our district. Top priority bills in the Legislature will be focused on public education funding, true property tax relief and reform so homeowners are no longer facing an oversized burden for local services, and calling to access federal dollars for the expansion of affordable healthcare in our communities. I have also earmarked bills filed in previous sessions that focus on safety and protection for victims and survivors of domestic violence.

*Describe how you will support adequate education funding for Texas public schools.

SCHOFIELD: In Texas, as in most states, the amount of funding a school district receives is based on the number of students the district educates. The current legislature provided an additional $8.5 billion to Texas schools, including $4.2 billion for pay raises for teachers and support staff. Over the coming decade, the biggest challenge for school budgets is going to be the steep decline in birth rates. Fewer births leads directly to fewer students in the schools, which leads to fewer dollars of funding. The school districts in HD 132 won't see a decline for quite a few years (in fact, Katy and Waller will continue to grow as more people move here), but other districts like the Houston and Austin ISDs have already experienced large enrollment drops. While those districts learn to administer their funds more efficiently as they educate fewer students, Katy, Waller, and Cy-Fair ISDs are likely to continue to receive funding similar to what they have been used to for the foreseeable future.

MCGEE: When people hear "increased funding," they tend to hear "increased taxes." But Texas is not broke -- our resources are being purposely mismanaged. We ended the last session with a $24 billion budget surplus, and we are currently sitting on a $30 billion "rainy day" fund. It is important that voters understand that adequately supporting public education does not have to come at the expense of middle-class taxpayers who are already squeezed to the brink. To start, we have to immediately end the voucher program and pass a Texas Constitutional Amendment forbidding the use of public tax dollars for services that operate for profit. If alternate educational institutions wish to operate in Texas and offer students opportunities outside of traditional public schooling, that should be permitted, but it needs to be clear that to access public tax dollars, these will be non-profit institutions. Next, we have to bring our teacher salaries up to 10% above the national average. Third, with healthcare costs rising to the point where they have all but erased the most recent teacher raises, it is time to allow educators, both current and retired, to access the same healthcare plan as other State of Texas employees. Fourth, supporting ALL educational staff should also be important. It is time to examine the salaries of paraprofessionals, librarians, bus drivers and all other educational support staff positions. And lastly, immediately end unfunded mandates. If the Texas Legislature passes a bill that increases costs to local districts, the state needs to attached funding to that bill. This has been a backdoor method of kneecapping our ISDs for years. It needs to stop.

*Describe how you will hold TxDOT accountable for timely completion of badly-needed mobility initiatives (such as the overdue completion of FM 1463) and how you will help TxDOT secure funding for other projects important to the Katy area, such as the widening of FM 529.

SCHOFIELD: I have already been working to secure funding for FM 529, which is still in the planning stages and won't actually be funded until it is ready to be built, which likely will be in at least two to three years. In the meantime, I have been working with our local elected officials to ensure that turn lanes and other traffic alleviation is provided near Freeman High School, which now has many times more traffic than before the schools opened. While FM 1463 is not in the district I represent, I have expressed to TxDOT's district engineer that it is imperative that FM 1463 finally be finished before the I-10 widening project begins, or the traffic in the area will be even more of a mess than it has been during the FM 1463 construction. That is unacceptable.

MCGEE: I would request that TxDOT provide regular written updates covering progress, timelines, and any delays. Prior to starting a project, and periodically throughout the process, TxDOT officials should be expected to hold public town halls to provide updates and allow residents to ask questions. Dashboards should be made publicly available so residents can track progress and receive updates in real time. For future project funding, I have decades of experience making the case for an allotment of limited funding to meet the needs of my department. The same would apply here. This district needs a representative who has the foresight to monitor and predict current and future population growth and needs and to use this data to make the case for why our projects should be funded. Fact and need based competitive bidding is something that I am particularly skilled at.

*Describe your strategy for strengthening the electricity grid in the state, with special attention to the development of data centers and potential location of battery energy storage systems in the Katy area, such as the Ochoa project.

SCHOFIELD: While it is important for the United States to have an adequate supply of data centers to avoid relying on China and Russia for storage of our private information, it is vital that the construction and operation of data centers not be allowed to infringe on our neighborhoods or to monopolize our water and power, which would drive up Texans' electric bills and exhaust our water supply. Local governments must be given the authority to prevent the location of gigantic, noisy data centers near residential neighborhoods. The Texas legislature also must pass a law requiring data centers to produce their own electricity so they don't impact the grid, and to limit the amount of water they can use in cooling the plant. Similarly, any battery facilities that involve heavy metals must be sited away from homes and schools, to avoid contamination from the heavy metals. If we elect thoughtful legislators, we can balance our need for high-tech industry with intelligent controls over where they are built and how they function.

MCGEE: Weatherization, diversification and accountability. We can no longer pretend that Texas is not an extreme weather state and shrug our shoulders when the power fails. Electric providers in this state absolutely must be held to higher performance standards; for instance, by using a percentage of up/downtime measurement, and face large penalties when those standards are not met. Secondly, we have to continue to diversify our energy portfolio. We can no longer have the attitude that all renewables are bad renewables or all fossil fuels are bad fossil fuels. Deploy oil and natural gas where it makes sense, wind and solar when it makes sense, and continue to look into other energy resources such as nuclear to support continued growth. Lastly, We should evaluate all data center and battery storage projects for a thorough review. It is unclear whether or not the current Texas government was fully aware of the incredible drain on natural resources that data centers bring. I believe these concerns were potentially overlooked in a haphazard effort to win some sort of tech war at the expense of our state. What has become clear in a relatively short amount of time is the incredible amounts of power and water required to run these data centers, and thus far, there have been no public protection measures put in place. As the electric companies scramble to build out their infrastructure to bring on these massive energy draining facilities, they have proceeded to immediately pass the cost onto consumers to pay for the upgrades, which is why we have seen our electric bills rise, and also why they are scrambling to implement alternatives - such as the Ochoa project - not to support a growing population, but a growing technology need. To be clear, we do not NEED data centers in Texas. They need US. They drain everything around them and offer little to no employment opportunities. They are a net negative to our state. It doesn't mean that we don't have the expansive land in Texas to accommodate them, but not without protections. Want to build a data center? Great. Find land that is a regulated distance away from existing communities. Build your own power supply and a desalination plant to support your water needs. Have a net positive or, at the very least, neutral effect on our existing population and then we can talk.

*What else should readers of the Katy Times know about you, your candidacy and your plans for District 132?

SCHOFIELD: As your representative in the legislature, I am keenly aware every day that I serve as the only voice we have in the Texas House of Representatives. Although the 200,000 of us who live in House District 132 can't agree on every issue, we can agree that we need a government that prioritizes our public safety and provides the necessary infrastructure, then gets out of the way and lets Texans build the future each of us envisions for our families. I am committed to continuing to work to ensure that your state government knows that it exists to serve you, and not the other way around.

MCGEE: I am not a politician, I am your neighbor. I am 45 years old and never in a million years did I expect to run for office. If elected, this is the only office that I ever plan to seek. I am here asking for your vote because the current representative who holds this office has long given up on even attempting to be accountable to the constituents he is elected to serve. I want to change that. I want to be an involved, responsive and be a truly representative voice in Austin for our community. I plan to hold quarterly town halls, always return emails and phone calls, and send out community surveys ahead of votes on large issues so I can ensure that our community and our needs are being accurately represented. I cannot promise that we will agree on everything, but I promise I will always listen, learn, and respond to our evolving needs in this district.

About Sara

I am not just a candidate; I am a lifelong Texan, born in Dallas and raised in Katy since I was three. I walked the halls of Katy High School and earned my Bachelor's in Radiologic Sciences from Midwestern State University in Wichita Falls.

For 22 years, I've dedicated my career to healthcare, currently serving as the Director of Radiology at a Houston hospital. I am also a proud mother to two children, and our chocolate lab, CJ.

Having called House District 132 home for 41 years, this place isn't just where I live; it's where I've grown up, where I've built my life, and where I've raised my children. The people here aren't just constituents; they are my neighbors, my friends, and my extended family.

I am running for office because I believe passionately that our collective voice, the voice of this community, deserves to be heard loud and clear in the Texas State Legislature. Let's ensure our district is represented by someone who truly understands and lives the life of a Texan.

Thank you for asking! And for anyone curious about my journey, I'm happy to share.

I got my first job at Boston Market on Fry Rd when I was 15. It's a McDonald's now, which is a shame, because I miss the sandwiches.

My second job was at Schlotzky's on Mason Rd (old location)

From age 17-19 I worked at Cracker Barrel at I-10 and Barker Cypress.

From age 19-22 I was a bartender. I also got married and had two kids.

At 23, I was divorced with 2 small children and at a cross roads.

I woke up one day and decided that wasn't the life I wanted for myself or my children. So I moved home with my mom and I enrolled in a Radiology Technology program.

My schedule for the next 2 years was:
School M-F 7:00a-3:00p. Come home, spend time with my kids. Put them to bed and then go to my bartending job from 8:00p-2:00a - back at school at 7:00a the next morning.

I graduated and my first job out of x-ray school was as an x-ray tech in a hospital working what they call a compressed weekend. I worked both Saturday and Sunday from 7:00a-11:00p for a total of 32 hours.

Only, at $16.09 an hour, that wasn't enough to support my family. So I got an advanced certificate in Mammography and worked at a mammography clinic during the week.

I did that for 4 years. 72 hours a week for 4 years.

Then I was fortunate enough to be promoted into an Imaging Manager position. Not yet ready to slow down, I worked in that position as my day job, while also working at a free-standing ED as a CT/x-ray tech for a 12 hour shift each weekend.

Oh, and while doing all this, I was also chipping away at my Bachelor's degree.

It wasn't until 2020 when I graduated from college that, for the first time in 25 years, I had only one job and wasn't either working a second job or also attending school.

After a break of a few years, I am now working full time and running for office in every second of my spare time.

So, Jay G (if that is your real name), which part of that life experience would make me unqualified to understand the unique challenges that we are facing in this world?

Happy Sunday. everyone!

Forced Pregnancy Is Reproductive Slavery

The time for nuance is over. Women are losing their rights and it's time to call it exactly what it is.

In the debate over abortion rights, one phrase is often avoided, even by the most ardent advocates for bodily autonomy: slavery. And yet, when we strip away the political framing, the religious arguments, and the legal gymnastics, we are left with a grim and undeniable truth: forcing a woman to remain pregnant against her will is a form of modern-day slavery.

This isn't hyperbole. It's a precise moral and legal observation rooted in the fundamental principles of human rights and personal liberty. Slavery, by definition, is the condition of being owned or controlled by another. It is the denial of agency, the exploitation of labor, and the subjugation of one's body to the will of someone else. When the state mandates that a woman carry a pregnancy to term regardless of her consent, it does exactly that.

Thanks for reading! Subscribe for free to receive new posts and support my work.

Bodily Autonomy: The Most Basic Human Right

Bodily autonomy is the cornerstone of all other freedoms. If a person cannot control what happens inside their own body, then they cannot be said to be free. Every major ethical and legal framework in the modern world recognizes this right - except, increasingly, when it comes to pregnant women.

In states where abortion has been outlawed or severely restricted, women are denied the basic freedom to choose whether to remain pregnant. Their bodies are conscripted for reproductive labor. The government decides that a fertilized egg, embryo, or fetus has more rights than the woman who carries it. In doing so, it demotes her status from full person to state-regulated incubator.

Pregnancy as Compulsory Biological Labor

Unlike most medical conditions, pregnancy is not something that simply happens to the body. It is something the body does. It is a form of labor - literal and metaphorical. A pregnant person's heart, lungs, liver, kidneys, and immune system all undergo profound changes. The process often involves debilitating symptoms, health risks, and in some cases, permanent injury or death. To force someone to endure this without consent is to compel them into service using their own body. That is reproductive slavery.

In no other context are people required by law to use their bodies for the benefit of others. A person cannot be forced to donate blood or organs - not even to save the life of their own child. And yet, some laws demand that a woman carry a pregnancy to term, regardless of the physical, emotional, or financial cost, even in cases of rape, incest, or fatal fetal anomaly. This is a violation not just of civil liberties, but of basic human decency.

Punishing Autonomy: A State of Surveillance and Fear

The erosion of abortion rights has led to a dangerous expansion of state power and surveillance over women's reproductive lives. In some cases, women have been investigated for miscarriages or denied lifesaving care because doctors fear legal repercussions. Others have been criminalized for traveling to seek abortion care out of state, buying abortion pills online, or simply talking about their reproductive choices.

This isn't freedom - it's reproductive authoritarianism. It weaponizes the law to control the most private aspects of a person's life, policing pregnancy outcomes and punishing those who dare to choose differently. It turns back the clock to an era when women's bodies were not their own.

Gendered Inequality in Medical Ethics

The forced pregnancy regime also reveals a glaring double standard. Men are never compelled by law to use their bodies for someone else. There is no legal mechanism which the state can force a man to donate an organ - even if that organ would save his own child's life. Our society recognizes that such a demand would be barbaric, a gross violation of personal liberty.

But when it comes to women - especially poor women, young women, and women of color - the rules change. Their bodies are seen as public property, to be regulated by lawmakers and religious extremists under the guise of morality. This is not about liberty. It is about control.

The Historical Echo of Enslavement

There is a chilling historical parallel here. During slavery in America, enslaved women were denied reproductive autonomy. They were forced to bear children to increase the wealth of their enslavers, treated not as people but as breeding stock. They had no say in whether to become pregnant, carry to term, or keep their children. Their reproductive capacity was owned, controlled, and exploited.

When modern laws force women to carry pregnancies they do not want, regardless of the circumstances, it is a continuation of this same logic: the state claims dominion over the reproductive labor of women. It decides when, how, and whether they will endure the physical burden of pregnancy. It treats their wombs as public utilities rather than private domains.

Reproductive Freedom Is Freedom

Forced Pregnancy Is Reproductive Slavery - Sara McGee

<https://sarafortexlege.substack.com/p/forced-pregnancy-is-reproductive>

If we accept the idea that the government can force someone to stay pregnant, we accept that bodily autonomy is conditional. And if bodily autonomy is conditional, then freedom is an illusion. You cannot be free if you are not free to say no to using your body for someone else's purpose.

Reproductive freedom is not a fringe issue or a single-issue cause. It is the foundation of gender equality, medical ethics, and human dignity. When we strip people of the right to control their own reproduction, we strip them of their personhood.

Conclusion

Calling forced pregnancy a form of slavery may make some people uncomfortable. I should. Slavery should never feel comfortable, in any form. And if we fail to call it what it is - if we soften the language to avoid offense - we risk obscuring the brutality of what is happening.

A state that forces pregnancy is a state that owns women's bodies. A society that allows it is complicit in reproductive bondage. Until every person has the freedom to decide what happens inside their own body, we cannot claim to be a free nation.

Let's stop pretending this is just about politics or religion. This is about freedom. This is about human rights. This is about ending modern slavery in all its forms - including the kind that wears the mask of morality.

Abortion absolutely IS a Constitutional right. It was ratified in the 13th Amendment.

“Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.”

Forcing a woman to use her body against her will for the benefit of another and at threat of punishment by the state is LITERALLY what the 13th Amendment states is illegal.

It's why fetal personhood bills have all failed. It's why the abortion abolitionists will fail. It is why any law passed in this country only goes after the PROVIDER of the abortion and not the WOMAN.

Anti-abortion laws have specifically been crafted to avoid the inevitable face-off in front of the Supreme Court.

The United States Constitution protects a woman's right to abortion. It just hasn't been legally challenged in this context to confirm that reality.

You will NEVER be able to outlaw abortion. Only safe and medically supervised abortion. And all that leads to is women and children dying.

Leave. Women. Alone.

The United States has always been more than a place on a map—it has been an idea, a promise, a refuge. And from its earliest days, that idea was carried forward on the backs of immigrants.

America was not founded by the descendants of one people, but by waves of migrants seeking safety, freedom, and opportunity. They came by choice, by force, and by desperation. They fled wars, famines, tyrants, and poverty. And each wave of immigrants—no matter how vilified in their time—has left an indelible mark on the country's growth, innovation, and character.

To turn our backs on immigrants now is not just a rejection of history. It's a rejection of our future.

A Nation Forged in Migration

The earliest chapters of American history are filled with the stories of immigrants. British colonists, Dutch traders, German farmers, and Irish laborers sought out a N

World with promise and peril in equal measure. But they were not alone. Enslaved Africans were violently brought to this land, stripped of freedom, family, and language, and forced to labor under an inhuman system that built the foundation of the American economy.

In the 19th and early 20th centuries, immigrants transformed the U.S. from a frontier republic into a global industrial powerhouse. The Chinese who laid the tracks for the transcontinental railroad, the Italians and Jews who filled New York tenements and built small businesses, the Mexicans who worked the fields of California—all played indispensable roles. It is no exaggeration to say that immigrants built America's cities, infrastructure, and middle class.

This wasn't without resistance. Immigrants were often met with fear, bigotry, and violence. But even amid hostility, they persevered, and their children and grandchildren became teachers, engineers, artists, and presidents. The American story is not just enriched by immigration—it is immigration.

A History of Backlash and Exclusion

Despite its immigrant roots, the U.S. has a long, troubling record of anti-immigrant laws and policies. Each new wave of arrivals has faced suspicion and rejection, especially when they looked, worshipped, or sounded different from the majority.

In 1882, the Chinese Exclusion Act became the first major federal law to ban immigration based on ethnicity—a response to rising xenophobia on the West Coast. In the 1920s, the National Origins Act imposed quotas that favored Northern and Western Europeans while slamming the door on Southern and Eastern Europeans, many of them Jews fleeing persecution.

During World War II, Japanese Americans—many U.S. citizens—were imprisoned in internment camps. Meanwhile, Jewish refugees fleeing the Holocaust were turned away. The legacy of exclusion also shaped how the U.S. has treated Latino immigrants.

Programs like Operation Wetback (1954) deported over a million Mexican workers, many of whom had been invited under the Bracero Program during labor shortages

Again and again, the U.S. has welcomed immigrants when it suits our economic need—then blamed them in times of fear or economic uncertainty. It is a cycle we have yet to break.

Today's Immigration System Is Failing—And It's Costing Lives

The modern U.S. immigration and asylum system is a tangle of outdated laws, impossible wait times, inconsistent enforcement, and humanitarian failure. The legal pathways for low- and middle-income migrants are so narrow that desperation drives people to dangerous journeys and vulnerable conditions.

America's asylum system is overwhelmed. There is no clear or timely process for many of those fleeing political violence, gender-based persecution, or climate disasters. Meanwhile, families are detained, children are separated, and people seeking protection are sent back to the very dangers they tried to escape.

What's often missing from this conversation is context—and accountability.

We Helped Create the Crises People Are Fleeing

Many of the people arriving at our border today are not just fleeing random chaos—they're fleeing crises that the United States helped create.

In Central America, U.S. interventions have fueled instability for over a century. In Guatemala, a CIA-backed coup in 1954 replaced a democratically elected government with a military dictatorship, leading to decades of civil war and genocide against Indigenous people. In El Salvador and Nicaragua, the U.S. funded brutal regimes and paramilitary groups during the Cold War, sowing violence that persists today. Gang violence, corruption, and poverty in the region didn't emerge in a vacuum—they're deeply tied to American foreign policy and economic exploitation.

In Haiti, U.S. occupations, embargoes, and support for dictatorships have created cycles of economic ruin and political collapse. In Afghanistan, Iraq, and other war zones, American military actions displaced millions. When these people seek asylum or safety, it is not just a humanitarian plea—it is, in many ways, a bill coming due.

The Birth Rate Is Falling—And Immigration Is Our Best Hope

Beyond morality, compassion, or history, immigration is essential to America's survival.

The U.S. birth rate has dropped far below the replacement level of 2.1 children per woman. In 2023, it stood at just 1.6. The causes are complex: economic insecurity, lack of family support systems, rising housing costs, and shifting social norms. But the consequences are straightforward. Fewer births mean a shrinking workforce, fewer taxpayers, and mounting pressure on entitlement programs like Social Security and Medicare.

We are already seeing early signs of strain. School districts are consolidating due to falling enrollment. Industries from agriculture to eldercare are facing critical labor shortages. Our population is aging faster than it's growing, and without immigration we will not have the human capital to maintain our economic power or support our aging population.

Countries like Japan and Italy offer cautionary tales: declining populations, economic stagnation, and overburdened welfare systems. The U.S., with its vast geography, infrastructure, and resources, is uniquely positioned to thrive—if we embrace immigration as a strength, not a threat.

Immigrants Don't Drain America—They Drive It

The idea that immigrants take more than they give is not only wrong—it's dangerously short-sighted. Immigrants are more likely to start businesses than native-born citizens. They are disproportionately represented in essential industries like healthcare, construction, technology, and food production. They contribute billions of dollars in taxes, pay into Medicare and Social Security, and often receive fewer benefits than they deserve.

Immigration Is Not America's Problem—It's Our Lifeline

When we invest in immigrants—through legal pathways, education, and inclusion—we don't dilute our country. We renew it. We replenish our workforce, invigorate our culture, and honor the very principles on which this country was built.

Conclusion: A Crossroads for the Nation

We stand at a crossroads. One path leads to deeper fear, division, and decline. The other leads to renewal.

We can choose to treat immigrants as scapegoats for complex problems, or we can recognize them for what they are: people, contributors, and neighbors. We can continue to view immigration as a threat to be contained—or we can see it as a lifeline we desperately need.

The United States has the tools, the space, the need, and the legacy to become a leader in humane, effective immigration policy. But to do so, we must reckon with our past, repair our broken systems, and recommit to the idea that made America possible in the first place:

That out of many, we are one.

Trump can't use Alien Enemies Act to deport Venezuelan gang members, court says | AP News

Updated 11:37 AM CDT, September 3, 2025

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal appeals court panel has ruled that President Donald Trump cannot use an 18th-century wartime law to speed the deportations of people his administration accuses of being in a Venezuelan gang. The decision blocking an administration priority is destined for a showdown at the U.S. Supreme Court.

Two judges on a three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, in the ruling Tuesday, agreed with immigrant rights lawyers and lower court judges who argued the Alien Enemies Act of 1798 was not intended to be used against gangs such as Tren de Aragua, which the Republican president had targeted in March.

Lee Gelernt, who argued the case for the ACLU, said the administration's use of "a wartime statute during peacetime to regulate immigration was rightly shut down by the court. This is a critically important decision reining in the administration's view that it can simply declare an emergency without any oversight by the courts.”

Abigail Jackson, a White House spokeswoman, said the majority erred in second-guessing the president.

“The authority to conduct national security operations in defense of the United States and to remove terrorists from the United States rests solely with the President,” Jackson said. “We expect to be vindicated on the merits in this case.”

The administration deported people designated as Tren de Aragua members to a notorious prison in El Salvador and argued that American courts could not order them freed.

In a deal announced in July, more than 250 of the deported migrants returned to Venezuela.

The Alien Enemies Act was only used three times before in U.S. history, all during declared wars — in the War of 1812 and the two world wars.

The administration unsuccessfully argued that courts cannot second-guess the president's determination that Tren de Aragua was connected to Venezuela's government and represented a danger to the United States, meriting use of the act.

In a 2-1 ruling, the judges said they granted the preliminary injunction sought by the plaintiffs because they "found no invasion or predatory incursion" in this case.

The decision bars deportations from Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. In the majority were U.S. Circuit Judges Leslie Southwick, who was nominated by Republican President George W. Bush, and Irma Carrillo Ramirez, who was nominated by Democratic President Joe Biden. Andrew Oldham, a Trump nominee, dissented.

The majority opinion said Trump's allegations about Tren de Aragua did not meet the historical levels of national conflict that Congress intended for the act.

"A country's encouraging its residents and citizens to enter this country illegally is not the modern-day equivalent of sending an armed, organized force to occupy, to disrupt, or to otherwise harm the United States," the judges wrote.

In a lengthy dissent, Oldham complained his two colleagues were second-guessing Trump's conduct of foreign affairs and national security, realms where courts usually give the president great deference.

"The majority's approach to this case is not only unprecedented—it is contrary to more than 200 years of precedent," Oldham wrote.

The panel did grant the Trump administration one legal victory, finding the procedures it uses to advise detainees under the Alien Enemies Act of their legal rights were appropriate.

The ruling can be appealed to the full 5th Circuit or directly to the Supreme Court, which is likely to make the ultimate decision on the issue.

The Supreme Court has already gotten involved twice before in the tangled history of the Trump administration's use of the AEA. In the initial weeks after Trump's March declaration, the court ruled that the administration could deport people under the act, but unanimously found that those targeted needed to be given a reasonable chance to argue their case before judges in the areas where they were held.

Then, as the administration moved to rapidly deport more Venezuelans from Texas, the high court stepped in again with an unusual, post-midnight ruling that they couldn't do so until the 5th Circuit decided whether the administration was providing adequate notice to the immigrants and could weigh in on the broader legal issues of the case. The high court has yet to address whether a gang can be cited as an alien enemy under the AEA.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court on Monday allowed the Trump administration to use an 18th century wartime law to deport Venezuelan migrants, but said they must get a court hearing before they are taken from the United States.

In a bitterly divided decision, the court said the administration must give Venezuelans who it claims are gang members “reasonable time” to go to court.

But the conservative majority said the legal challenges must take place in Texas, instead of a Washington courtroom.

The court’s action appears to bar the administration from immediately resuming the flights that last month carried hundreds of migrants to a notorious prison in El Salvador. The flights came soon after President Donald Trump invoked the Alien Enemies Act for the first time since World War II to justify the deportations under a presidential proclamation calling the Tren de Aragua gang an invading force.

The majority said nothing about those flights, which took off without providing the hearing the justices now say is necessary.

In dissent, the three liberal justices said the administration has sought to avoid judicial review in this case and the court “now rewards the government for its behavior.” Justice Amy Coney Barrett joined portions of the dissent.

and noted that the administration has also said in another case before the court that it's unable to return people who have been deported to the El Salvador prison by mistake.

"We, as a Nation and a court of law, should be better than this," she wrote.

The justices acted on the administration's emergency appeal after the federal appeals court in Washington left in place an order temporarily prohibiting deportations of the migrants accused of being gang members under the rarely used Alien Enemies Act.

"For all the rhetoric of the dissents," the court wrote in an unsigned opinion, the high court order confirms "that the detainees subject to removal orders under the AEA are entitled to notice and an opportunity to challenge their removal."

Trump praised the court for its action Monday.

"The Supreme Court has upheld the Rule of Law in our Nation by allowing a President, whoever that may be, to be able to secure our Borders, and protect our families and our Country, itself. A GREAT DAY FOR JUSTICE IN AMERICA!" Trump wrote on his Truth Social site.

The original order blocking the deportations to El Salvador was issued by U.S. District Judge James E. Boasberg, the chief judge at the federal courthouse in Washington.

Attorneys from the American Civil Liberties Union filed the lawsuit on behalf of five Venezuelan noncitizens who were being held in Texas, hours after the proclamation was made public and as immigration authorities were shepherding hundreds of migrants to waiting airplanes.

ACLU attorney Lee Gelernt said the "critical point" of the high court's ruling was that people must be allowed due process to challenge their removal. "That is an important victory," he said.

Boasberg imposed a temporary halt on deportations and also ordered planeloads of Venezuelan immigrants to return to the U.S. That did not happen. The judge held a hearing last week over whether the government defied his order to turn the planes around. The administration has invoked a " state secrets privilege " and refused to give Boasberg any additional information about the deportations.

Trump and his allies have called for impeaching Boasberg. In a rare statement, Chief Justice John Roberts said "impeachment is not an appropriate response to disagreement concerning a judicial decision."

Trump confirms U.S. strike on alleged 'drug-carrying submarine'

There had been no known survivors until now across 6 military strikes that have killed at least 27

U.S. President Donald Trump on Friday confirmed a U.S. military strike on an alleged "drug-carrying submarine" in the Caribbean amid reports the military is holding two survivors aboard a navy ship after its strike killed two others.

"We attacked a submarine, and that was a drug-carrying submarine built specifically for the transportation of massive amounts of drugs" Trump said while hosting Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy at the White House.

He did not comment on how many had been killed in the strike or how many had survived it. Secretary of State Marco Rubio did not dispute that there were survivors, but he repeatedly said details would be forthcoming.

The reports that there are two survivors came from Reuters, which cited three sources familiar with the matter.

The disclosure, which has not been previously reported, raises the possibility that the survivors from Thursday's strike are the first prisoners of war in a conflict declared by Trump against a "narcoterrorist" threat he says is emanating from Venezuela.

Prior to Thursday's operation, U.S. military strikes against suspected drug boats off Venezuela had not left any known survivors.

The strikes began in early September. Videos presented by the Trump administration have showed vessels being destroyed, but information about the identities of individuals or the cargo on the boats has not been released publicly by the administration.

One of the sources said the vessel struck on Thursday moved below the water and was possibly a semi-submersible, which is a submarine-like vessel used by drug traffickers to avoid detection.

Five sources familiar with the matter said the U.S. military staged a helicopter rescue to pick up the survivors of the attack and bring them back to the U.S. warship.

U.S. lawmakers asking questions

The Trump administration has said the previous strikes killed 27 people, raising alarms among some legal experts, many Democratic lawmakers and at least two Republicans, Sen. Rand Paul, of Kentucky, and Sen. Lisa Murkowski, of Alaska. Critics question whether the strikes adhere to the laws of war.

On Wednesday, Trump disclosed he had authorized the Central Intelligence Agency to conduct covert operations inside Venezuela, adding to speculation in Caracas that the United States is attempting to topple Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro.

Trans Rights, National Distractions, and the Politics of Division

They want us to look here when we should be looking everywhere else

In recent years, America has found itself consumed by debates over transgender rights—most notably, the participation of transgender athletes in school and professional sports. From state legislatures to cable news cycles, the visibility of trans issues has skyrocketed, but too often in a way that distorts reality, fuels division, and redirects political energy away from more pressing national challenges.

What began as an issue affecting a very small number of people—transgender athletes in school competitions—has become a political flashpoint and a wedge issue, amplified far beyond its actual scope. The debate has become not just about sports, but a symbol onto which broader fears and cultural anxieties are projected. And in process, it has opened the door to dangerous overreach, invasive legislation, and national distraction.

Thanks for reading! Subscribe for free to receive
new posts and support my work.

A Small Issue Made Into a National Crisis

Transgender people make up approximately 0.6% of the U.S. adult population. The number of transgender athletes competing in youth sports is even smaller—by some estimates, only a few hundred nationwide. Yet in the past three years, over half of U states have introduced or passed legislation aimed at restricting trans participation sports.

On the surface, many of these laws claim to be about fairness. Proponents argue that allowing trans girls to compete in girls' sports could create an uneven playing field. But in reality, the number of documented cases where transgender athletes have dominated competitions is minuscule. Most of the debate is built on hypotheticals, on data.

The result? A national crisis has been manufactured around an issue that affects a statistically tiny number of people. Trans kids—already among the most vulnerable youth in America—have been thrust into the spotlight, often facing ridicule, exclusion and threats simply for trying to play sports, go to school, and be themselves.

The Legal and Logistical Nightmare

One reason this issue cannot be easily legislated at the federal level is the complex patchwork of state laws governing how individuals can legally change their gender markers. Some states allow transgender people to update their birth certificates with minimal medical documentation. Others require proof of surgery, court orders, or prohibit changes altogether.

This inconsistency presents a legal paradox. A transgender teen recognized as female in California could move to Texas and suddenly be required to compete as male—even if her legal documents, appearance, and identity say otherwise. Trying to impose a one-size-fits-all federal law over such variation would not only be chaotic, but potentially unconstitutional.

Even more alarmingly, enforcement of these laws often leads down a slippery slope. Some proposed bills, schools and sports leagues are empowered to “verify” a student's biological sex if there's a dispute. This opens the door to genital inspections, invasive testing, and other forms of surveillance—all under the banner of protecting fairness.

The mere idea that young people could be subjected to this kind of state-sanctioned violation of privacy should raise deep moral, legal, and ethical concerns. In attempt to exclude the “wrong” person, such policies risk harming everyone—including cisgender kids whose appearance or behavior doesn’t conform to gender norms.

A Culture War Weapon, Not a Policy Priority

So why has this become such a national flashpoint?

In large part, because it serves a political purpose. Trans rights have become a convenient culture war weapon, used to mobilize a political base, dominate headlines and draw battle lines between “us” and “them.” This strategy is not new—similar tactics were used in past decades to stir panic around gay marriage, bathroom bills, and racial integration.

But it’s especially potent now, in an age of fractured attention and algorithm-driven outrage. Trans athletes are not a policy priority—they’re a political symbol. A handful of stories, often sensationalized or misrepresented, have been used to fuel a moral panic that vastly overshadows the actual impact of the issue.

And while this manufactured debate rages on, the country continues to face real and urgent problems.

The Real Issues Being Ignored

While lawmakers hold hearings about who gets to play volleyball, millions of Americans are grappling with:

- Widening income inequality and stagnant wages
- Soaring housing costs and a growing homelessness crisis
- A healthcare system that remains unaffordable and inaccessible for many

- Gun violence that kills tens of thousands annually
- A deeply flawed immigration system that both dehumanizes migrants and fails to meet our labor needs
- Climate change, which is already displacing communities and straining resources
- A troubling decline in democratic norms, from voter suppression to political violence

None of these crises can be solved by targeting trans youth.

In fact, the national obsession with regulating trans lives has become a kind of distraction theater—a way for politicians to appear active without solving problems; divides people against each other based on fear and misunderstanding, rather than bringing them together around shared needs and values.

Conclusion: Choosing Empathy Over Division

Transgender people are not new, nor are they a threat. They are our neighbors, classmates, co-workers, and family members. The sudden surge in legislation and national rhetoric against them is not a response to a crisis—it is the creation of one.

We must ask ourselves: Who benefits when we spend our national energy attacking a group of young people who just want to live their lives? Who profits when we're too distracted by culture war outrage to demand real action on jobs, housing, healthcare, or climate?

We can choose another path. A path that affirms the dignity of all people, including trans people, and focuses our time and resources on the issues that truly matter.

Because history will not judge us by how effectively we excluded the vulnerable. It will judge us by how we responded when fear and hatred were used to divide us.

There is a serious constitutional issue with enforcement of a law based solely on how someone thinks someone else looks.

Not to mention, this law also just forced trans men back into women's restrooms and many of them definitely pass as men. So now they are going to be attacked for being a man in a woman's restroom.

Look, I get the sentiment - I really do. But there is no legal way to enforce this without violating privacy laws.

Over my dead body will someone drag me to court and force me to prove my birth sex just for going to the bathroom. This IS still America, right?

It's asinine and only written to play to an emotional base.

I was in Toronto in November for a concert. The bathrooms were gender neutral. For half a second when I realized that I was standing in line with men I paused. Then I realized, oh ok, they're cool here.

Everyone went into the stall, did their business, washed their hands and left.

I will never, ever, understand the obsession with who uses what bathroom.

THERE ARE STALLS.

No one is looking at, or thinking about, what genitals are behind those doors.

Except for maybe MAGA, I guess, who have made it their life mission to be the genital police?

Don't let any of this distract you from the fact that the real predators are straight men.

I was molested by my step father for an entire year, who was a deacon at the First Baptist Church in Katy, and I promise you - he never tried to use a women's restroom.

1) It's not pandering, it's just common sense. Until the right decided to demonize an entire minority of people, most just moved in the shadows with everyone else.

2) I feel infinitely more at ease with a trans woman than I do with a straight man.

3) Imagine saying something like that during the Civil Rights movement. (Apply that to #1 as well)

Look, I genuinely get it. It's legitimate fear of the unknown, and I empathize with that. But that doesn't mean it's right.

With all due respect, what I have observed in my 44 years on earth is the “right” side of the political aisle who protect and cover for rapists, pedophiles and groomers.

I have three friends who are trans and an untold number of friends who are gay, and the one thing that they all have in common is that they all have straight parents, and come from loving supportive homes. So it’s almost like they were... born that way? Hang on, I’m pretty sure that’s what the science says.

Miss me with the “grooming” nonsense. Any teacher who has a picture of themselves and their spouse displayed in their classroom, or who tells stories about their husband or wife, has proclaimed to their students what their relationship preferences are.

No one calls it grooming when it matches your preconceived notion of what their relationship preferences nuclear family should look like.

Children aren’t in danger. They just want to be who they are, dress how they want to dress, love who they want to love and just pursue happiness in this life.

And I am so sorry (I’m not actually sorry) that you can’t even begin to accept or have compassion for someone that you don’t understand.

But that doesn’t mean it’s wrong. It just means that you don’t understand.

It's campaign season, and I'm kicking off a new series called Meet The Candidates. Over the next fourteen months, I'll spotlight a handful of Democratic races each month, mainly in the Legislature and in Congress. These aren't endorsements. They're introductions, a way to understand who's running, the districts they hope to represent, and what's at stake for working people across Texas. We'll start with House District 132 and Sara McGee.

A lifelong Texan who grew up in Katy, raised two kids as a single mom, and clawed her way from bartending nights to running a hospital radiology department. Forty-one years in House District 132 means PTA lines, Sealy soccer fields, and neighbors who know her by name. She's worked 70–80-hour weeks, learned the system from the inside, and she talks like someone who's had to fix problems at 3 am.

She decided to run the day her Republican representative called her a liar to her face about the real harms of Texas' abortion bans. Since then, she's been a "for the people" candidate, fair capitalism, strong public schools, real healthcare access, and representation that actually answers emails. No corporate PAC leash, small-dollar donors, a heavy ground game, and a promise to be accessible. Translation: she'll knock doors, hold town halls, listen first, and fight like hell for working Texans in HD-132.

House District 132 is a fast-growing, family-heavy suburban district. It's racially and linguistically diverse, about 41% Anglo, 59% people of color (29% Hispanic, 15% Black, 15% Asian), and 37% speak a language other than English at home. Nearly half of adults hold a bachelor's degree or higher, poverty runs well below the state average (8.6%), and a lot of folks are working professional/health/retail jobs with serious commute times.

Housing reveals why people feel the squeeze: two-thirds are homeowners, new construction dominates (41% built since 2010), the average home value is around $388k, and average rent is steep at ~$1,845. More than a third of households make $100k–$199k and another fifth top $200k, yet almost half of renters are cost-burdened, paying 35%+ of income on rent. Translation: this is a diverse, commuter-heavy, school-centered district where property taxes, classroom funding, healthcare access, and housing costs are a kitchen-table reality.

Mike Schofield (R-HD132), a possible lizard person and New Jersey native, spent 11 years as a senior advisor to Gov. Rick Perry, boasting that he was the governor's "point man" on Texas' strict photo voter ID law and on the "loser pays" tort-reform push.

The Texas Classroom Teachers Association rates him "Unfriendly" and lists him as voting against key anti-voucher and school-funding amendments in 2023. Schofield has long operated inside the Texans for Lawsuit Reform orbit.

Basically, he's a dime-a-dozen Republican who works really hard for billionaires while his constituents are being priced out of their homes. And despite representing a district where housing costs, commuting, and public school quality are constant concerns, his legislative history is one of prioritizing business and legal interests, property protections, and limits on liability over some of the everyday financial pressures his constituents face.

Below are some questions I asked McGee, based on previous reader polls, and how she answered.

Q: Do you support a statewide minimum wage increase to at least $15/hour?

Yes. Texans are struggling. Minimum wage was created to ensure that companies were not exploiting workers. Increases have been avoided for decades to allow the "free market" to work - it has failed. Texans are working 2-3 jobs just to make ends meet and that is inexcusable.

Q: Do you oppose school vouchers and efforts to privatize public education?

Meet The Candidates: Sara McGee For Texas House District 132

about:reader?url=https%3A%2F%2Fwww.lonestarleft.com%2Fp%2Fme...

School vouchers, like our broken healthcare system, are yet another way that the GOP has devised to convert public tax payer funds into private profit. Adding a layer of profit to a public system has never improved it - it has only led to services that are more expensive and lower quality. The same thing will happen with education if we do not stop vouchers before they start.

Q: Should Texas guarantee free school meals to all K-12 students, regardless of income?

Absolutely. In the hierarchy of human needs, hunger is the absolute first need. You cannot expect children to be able to learn without proper nutrition first.

Q: Should Texas end tax breaks and regulatory loopholes for oil and gas companies, including exemptions from emissions reporting and waste disposal standards?

Regulatory loopholes - absolutely. There is nothing more important than our health and the health of future generations. For tax breaks, I would want to study the downstream effect on energy costs for ending them altogether - but there is definitely a balance that is not currently being accomplished.

Bonus Question: What does being a Democrat mean to you in 2026?

It means fighting for the GOOD. The GOP has become nothing but a 24/7 hate campaign to distract from the fact that all their policies accomplish is to hurt the working class and help the billionaires and it is exhausting.

On one side, you've got a career insider who helped write the voter-ID playbook and cozies up to voucher politics. On the other hand, a hospital department head who's spent two decades solving problems in real rooms with real people, and who jumped in only after seeing her neighbors hurt by laws written by men who don't have to live with them.

This race is a clean test. Do we continue to reward those who serve donors, or should we send someone who serves the district? If you live in 132, please check your registration, find out your polling place, and consider bringing a friend. If you don't, share this with someone who does. We don't fix Texas in think pieces. We fix it by turning out, precinct by precinct, until the people writing the laws finally look and sound like the communities they represent.

The Big Lie: How School Funding and Property Taxes Have Become a Web of Corruption in Texas

How Texas politicians turned local control into a state budget tool, and are now using the same power to seize your school board.

SARA MCGEE

I've been staring at Texas school finance formulas for longer than is probably healthy.

And the more I dig, the more I keep coming back to the same uncomfortable truth: the system isn't broken. It's working exactly the way it was designed to work. The problem is that it was designed to serve Austin's budget needs and Greg Abbott's political interests first, and your community's kids a distant second.

That's a hard thing to say out loud. But the evidence is right there in the numbers, and in the headlines, and in the communities that have watched their elected school boards get thrown out and replaced by people they never voted for.

What We Were Promised

The original deal in Texas was straightforward. Your school district sets a tax rate. Your county collects it. Your district keeps it and decides how to spend it on your kids.

Local community, local money, local decisions. That's the Texas way, or at least, it used to be.

It also produced wildly unequal schools. A district sitting on top of oil and gas money could fund almost anything. A poor rural district, or a working-class urban one, was just out of luck. Courts eventually ruled that unconstitutional, and honestly, they were.

The Big Lie: How School Funding and Property Taxes Have Become a... <https://sarafortexlege.substack.com/p/the-big-lie-how-school-funding-and> right. Every kid in Texas deserves a real shot at a real education.

But the Legislature's fix, engineered by lawmakers who have controlled Austin for thirty years, created a whole new set of problems that we're still living with today.

The Workaround That Swallowed the System

Here's the constraint that shaped everything: Texas is constitutionally prohibited from levying a statewide property tax. The Legislature couldn't just take over school funding directly.

So they got creative.

They left the local tax structure in place. Your district still levies the tax, your county still collects it. But they took control over how much of it your district actually gets to keep. If your district raises more than the state's formula allows, the "excess" gets redistributed through Austin to other districts. That's recapture. That's "Robin Hood."

The equity goal was legitimate. I'm not here to argue that wealthy enclaves should hoard unlimited revenue while rural schools crumble.

What I'm here to argue is that recapture stopped being just an equity tool a long time ago. Under decades of Republican legislative majorities, it became something the state uses to manage its own budget exposure. Which is a very different thing.

As property values in suburban areas climbed, recapture payments climbed with them. More and more local revenue got routed through Austin. And the state used that flow to offset what it would otherwise have had to spend from its own budget. Local taxpayers ended up subsidizing state-level Republican budget management without anyone saying so plainly.

When Greg Abbott and the Republican supermajority brag about cutting taxes or holding the line on state spending, they're leaving out the part where local property taxpayers quietly picked up the tab.

The Mandate Problem

At the same time recapture was growing, the Republican-controlled Legislature kept adding requirements to school districts.

Teacher compensation structures. Academic performance standards. Program obligations. Compliance costs. The list is long and it keeps getting longer.

Each requirement comes with partial funding at best. The rest gets absorbed locally meaning it lands on your property tax bill. Policy decisions get made in Austin. The financial consequences show up in your mailbox.

This is the part that should make everyone angry, regardless of party. If you're a conservative voter in Katy, a progressive parent in Houston, or a rancher in the Panhandle, being told what to do without being given the money to do it is a raw deal. That's what an unfunded mandate is. And the Texas Republican Legislature has built a school finance system that runs on them, while campaigning on "local control" with a straight face.

Why Nobody Gets Blamed

The part that really gets me is how the accountability disappears.

Your school district still has a board. It still holds public hearings. It still has a face and a name and a phone number you can call. So when your property tax bill goes up, the natural instinct is to blame the people you can actually see: your local trustees, your superintendent, your district.

Meanwhile, the recapture payments that left your county before your district ever touched them? The mandates that drove costs up without corresponding funding? The formulas written in Austin by people most voters couldn't pick out of a lineup? That part of the picture is invisible.

The Big Lie: How School Funding and Property Taxes Have Become a...

<https://sarafortexlege.substack.com/p/the-big-lie-how-school-funding-and>

Republicans in Austin designed a system where they make the decisions and local officials absorb the political heat. It's actually pretty brilliant if you're the one doing it. It's maddening if you're the one paying for it.

And Then They Came for the School Boards

Here's where this story takes a turn that I think should alarm anyone who actually believes in local control, and I mean anyone, left or right.

The Republican-controlled Legislature has spent decades underfunding schools, layering on mandates, and using accountability formulas that critics say are stacked against low-income districts. Then, when those underfunded and overburdened districts struggle to meet the state's standards, Austin swoops in and says: you failed, we're taking over.

In 2023, the Texas Education Agency, led by Commissioner Mike Morath, appointed by Greg Abbott, seized control of Houston ISD, the largest school district in the state. Elected board members were removed. A state-appointed superintendent was installed. The community fought it in court and lost when the Texas Supreme Court ruled the state could proceed.

Fort Worth ISD lost its elected board in late 2025. Beaumont, Connally, and Lake Worth followed in December. Five districts in a single year. Eleven total since 2008.

The communities most affected, Houston, Fort Worth, Beaumont, are majority Black and Hispanic, with high proportions of low-income students. The trigger schools that set off these takeovers are overwhelmingly serving kids the state has historically underinvested in. You can draw your own conclusions about that pattern.

And the results? A University of Houston study released earlier this year found that Houston ISD lost more than 13,000 students since the takeover. Teacher retention dropped from above 70% to 58.6%. Uncertified teachers spiked from less than 1% of workforce to nearly 20%. Families voted with their feet, moving their kids to neighboring districts and charter schools.

The Big Lie: How School Funding and Property Taxes Have Become a... <https://sarafortexlege.substack.com/p/the-big-lie-how-school-funding-and>

As one Fort Worth parent organizer put it: “An appointed board of managers is beholden not to local citizens. They’re beholden to Mike Morath and ultimately, Gr Abbott.”

A state government using the failures it helped create as justification to take power away from the communities it failed. Full stop.

Who’s Actually Cashing In

Now here’s the part nobody talks about loudly enough.

When a school district gets taken over and local accountability disappears, someone fills the vacuum. And it’s usually not the kids.

In Houston, Morath’s handpicked superintendent Mike Miles immediately moved to expand his own spending authority without board approval, from $100,000 to $2 million per contract. Within months, his administration bypassed required board approval for roughly $870 million in spending. A Texas Observer investigation also found irregularities connecting Miles to a Colorado charter school nonprofit he founded, with Texas public school money flowing through a tangled web of contracts and partnerships. Miles denied wrongdoing. The TEA, which appointed him, investigated itself and found no violations. Make of that what you will.

Meanwhile, library spaces were converted into discipline rooms. Special education staff were cut. School hours were extended. The kids who needed stability the most chaos instead.

And now Abbott has added the final piece of the puzzle: a $1 billion school voucher program, the largest starting dollar amount for any program of its kind in the count

Here's what that program actually is. Up to 20% of the voucher funds can go to families making more than $160,000 a year. Budget experts project costs could climb to roughly $4.8 billion by 2030. Private schools that receive voucher money face no meaningful accountability requirements. And the program was funded and driven to passage by very specific group of people: billionaire donors from out of state who had spent years pouring money into Texas politics to make this happen.

Jeffrey Yass, a Pennsylvania investor, poured more than $12 million into Texas race to push vouchers through. Miriam Adelson spent around $13 million. A Betsy DeVos-funded group spent more than $4 million attacking incumbents who voted against vouchers. The Club for Growth spent about $8 million more.

When a group of Republican House members blocked Abbott's earlier voucher attempts in 2023, he didn't back down. He spent millions from his own campaign war chest to primary them out of office. He called members into his office one by one to pressure them. He told wavering Republicans he would make their primary election a "bloodbath."

Rep. James Talarico said it plainly: "Big money won the day, and Greg Abbott's billionaire mega donors have taken over this government."

So follow the money. Out-of-state billionaires fund Abbott's campaigns. Abbott pushes vouchers and signs them into law. Public school dollars flow toward private schools with no accountability. Takeovers clear the way for charter operators and outside vendors to move in without the friction of local oversight. The communities whose kids are most at risk get the least say in what happens to them.

The pattern is: defund, destabilize, take over, privatize. And the people writing the checks aren't even from Texas.

What We Can Actually Fix

Okay. I promised solutions. Here they are, and I want to be honest about the tradeoffs especially for rural communities. The last thing we should do is trade one bad deal for another. Any reform that gives wealthy suburban districts more flexibility while gutting the equalization funding that rural Texas depends on would be trading one injustice for another. That's not acceptable.

With that said, here's what I think we should actually be working toward:

Fund what you mandate. If the state requires it, the state pays for it. Every new mandate should come with a real fiscal note and a real funding stream. No more quietly pushing costs onto local property taxpayers while pretending it's a local decision.

Make recapture predictable and transparent. Recapture isn't inherently wrong, but should be governed by stable, clear formulas that districts can actually plan around, not used as a variable that shifts based on what Austin needs in a given budget cycle. And every taxpayer should be able to see a plain-language breakdown: how much was raised locally, how much left through recapture, what the state contributed, and what drove the costs.

Protect rural districts. Any conversation about restoring local flexibility has to start here. Rural communities are already dealing with shrinking tax bases, population loss, and state disinvestment across the board. The answer is a strong state funding floor, one that guarantees rural districts a stable baseline regardless of what's happening with property values in their counties. Local control without that floor is just abandonment with a better name.

Reform the takeover trigger before it's used as a political weapon. A single struggling campus in a district of 60,000 kids should not give the state grounds to remove an elected school board member. The current law, passed in 2015 and signed by Abbott, is a blunt instrument that punishes entire communities for problems that are often decades in the making and deeply tied to poverty and underfunding. We need reform that requires real intervention support before any takeover, full financial transparency, during any state-managed period, and a clear, enforceable timeline for returning control to local communities.

End the voucher program and put that money back in public schools. The ESA program was built to reward out-of-state billionaire donors, not Texas kids. Up to 2 of funds can flow to families already making $160,000 a year. Private schools that take the money face no real accountability. And budget projections show the cost climbing to nearly $5 billion by 2030 - money drained straight out of the public school system struggling district in Beaumont or Connally doesn't need more competition from a private school down the street. It needs the funding the state has been withholding decades. Repeal the voucher program and redirect every dollar back into the public schools that serve 90% of Texas kids.

Give districts real discretion. Right now, most local "decision-making" is compliance theater. A rural district in the Panhandle and a suburban district outside Houston have genuinely different needs, different cost structures, different communities. Fund them. Set broad guardrails. Then get out of the way and let local people make real choices about how to serve their kids.

The Honest Version

Texas Republicans built a system where local communities carry the financial weight and Austin makes the policy calls. They preserved all the appearance of local control: the boards, the elections, the tax rates, while stripping out most of the substance. And when the system's failures become too visible to ignore, they use those failures as justification to eliminate the local control that remained, hand the reins to unelected administrators, and open the door to the donors and operators who funded the whole operation.

Your property taxes go up. Your district's hands are tied. Your board can be dissolved. And the people responsible for designing this system keep getting re-elected on a platform of (I promise I'm not making this up) local control.

The Big Lie: How School Funding and Property Taxes Have Become a... <https://sarafortextlege.substack.com/p/the-big-lie-how-school-funding-and>

Texans deserve a school finance system they can understand, that does what it says, and that holds the right people accountable when it doesn't.

The accountability is in Austin. And we need to start saying that clearly.

Privatization is the Problem.

Americans are being sold "choice" and "competition" while billionaires and corporations cash in on the services the public is still forced to pay for. The Citizens United decision opened the door.

Every time somebody starts talking about "cutting government spending," I find myself wanting to ask a much more basic question first: why are we pretending the cost of government exists in a vacuum, as if it has nothing to do with the way we ch to build the system?

Because we did choose this.

We chose to build a country where public money gets funneled through private companies, where basic services come with a profit margin attached, and where the public is then lectured about how expensive everything has become. People act like spending problem just fell out of the sky. It did not. We spent years handing public functions over to private interests and then acting shocked when the price went up.

Of course it went up.

When you build a for-profit layer into something the public was already going to ha to pay for, you are not creating efficiency. You are creating another mouth to feed. / once that mouth gets used to eating, it hires lobbyists, funds campaigns, writes talk points, and starts calling itself "innovation."

That has happened in health care. It has happened in prisons. It has happened in w It is happening right now in public education.

And I am tired of pretending this is some abstract ideological debate.

Look at health care. In 2024, the United States spent $5.3 trillion on health care. That comes out to $15,474 per person, or 18.0% of GDP. Private health insurance alone accounted for \$1.6446 trillion, about 31% of total health spending.

That is an obscene amount of money. And what do regular people get in return? Medical debt. Delayed care. Endless fights with insurance companies. Surprise bills. Prior authorizations. Network nonsense. Claims denials. People skipping treatment because they are afraid of what the envelope in the mail is going to say.

I am so over hearing that this is the price of “choice.”

Choice for who?

If you live in a rural community and the nearest hospital is 30 miles away, you are not in some beautiful free-market paradise. You are in a vulnerable position and hoping nothing goes wrong on a Tuesday night. KFF found that from 2017 to 2023, rural hospital closures outpaced openings by a mile: 61 rural hospitals closed and only 11 opened. In Texas, the Texas Organization of Rural & Community Hospitals says 26 rural hospital closures have happened since the start of 2010, and 76 rural Texas hospitals are at risk of closure, with 12 at immediate risk.

So when people talk about “market competition” in health care, I need them to explain what that means in an actual town, with actual people, where there is one hospital or none at all. Explain to me how somebody is supposed to “shop around” while having chest pain. Explain how a pregnant woman in a rural county is supposed to bargain with geography. Explain how a parent with a sick child is supposed to leverage competition when care keeps moving farther away.

That entire argument only works if you never picture a real human being inside it.

And then there is all the money getting burned on the private administrative maze.

CMS gives us the topline spending numbers, but the lived reality is the real story: we have built a giant, expensive bureaucracy around the act of getting care to people. Private insurers do not simply process care. They create a whole system of gates, paperwork, cost-sharing, approvals, denials, appeals, and overhead that patients and providers have to fight through. The public keeps paying, and a private industry keeps taking its cut.

That same poison runs through the prison system.

I genuinely do not know how anybody says “for-profit prison” out loud and does not hear how deranged that sounds.

A prison is one of the most serious powers the state has. It is the power to take away a person’s liberty. Somewhere along the way, we let corporations turn that into a business model. According to The Sentencing Project, 90,873 people were held in private prisons in 2022, representing 8% of the total state and federal prison population.

And for what? So someone can make money every time the government decides to cage a human being?

There is no honest way to dress that up. There is no uplifting TED Talk version of it. There is no clean moral language that fixes the underlying problem. Once incarceration becomes a profit center, the incentives start bending in the worst possible direction. That does not mean every person working in or around the system wakes up cartoonishly evil. It means the structure itself is warped. It means private firms have a financial interest in contracts continuing, beds being filled, and revenue being protected.

People love to say the private sector is better because it is more disciplined. Fine. Disciplined toward what? In this case, disciplined toward extracting money from public punishment.

Then we get to war, where privatization and profit have been wrapped in a flag for long that people are afraid to say the obvious part out loud.

Defense contracting is a giant business. The Department of Defense moves enormous sums of money, and the F-35 program alone is expected to cost over \$2 trillion in acquisition and sustainment. At the same time, the military industry has spent more than \$100 million per year lobbying policymakers for over two decades.

If there is that much money on the table, companies are going to fight like hell to keep it flowing. They are going to influence policy. They are going to protect contracts. They are going to resist reforms. They are going to frame every criticism as weakness and every request for accountability as naïveté. And because they are dealing in national security, they get the added bonus of acting like scrutiny itself is unpatriotic.

Meanwhile, taxpayers are left funding cost overruns, delays, maintenance arrangements, and endless contracting relationships that seem to reproduce themselves forever. Everybody in Washington suddenly becomes very serious and very solemn when it is time to spend public money on private defense firms. That same seriousness disappears when it is time to fund schools, health care, housing, or anything else that might help normal people live with a little more dignity.

And now Texas is dragging public education down the same road.

The voucher pitch has always insulted my intelligence. We are told this is about freedom, competition, and helping kids. But the fiscal mechanics are not mysterious. Texas' voucher program was budgeted at \$1 billion for the 2026-27 biennium. That is expected to grow substantially; one Texas education advocacy analysis points to projections rising to \$7.9 billion by 2030-31, and even supporters of vouchers acknowledge the spending starts with a large new state commitment.

So the state somehow has money to build a taxpayer-funded pipeline into private education, but we are still supposed to believe there is never enough money for the public schools that take everybody.

Privatization is the Problem. - Sara McGee

<https://sarafortextlege.substack.com/p/privatization-is-the-problem>

Everybody.

The kid with disabilities.

The kid whose parents work two jobs.

The kid who needs transportation.

The kid who just moved.

The kid who is hungry.

The kid who is struggling.

The kid who is hard to teach.

The kid the private system does not want.

Public schools do not get to pick and choose. That is part of the job. So when public dollars are siphoned away and redirected into privatized systems, what happens next is not hard to predict. The public system keeps the broadest obligation and loses funds at the same time.

And there is more bad news for the people still pretending vouchers are some tidy little reform. A 2025 working paper on universal school vouchers found they have increased private school tuition by 5% to 10% in voucher states while increasing enrollment by only 3% to 4% so far.

So now we are talking about public money helping drive up private tuition while a large chunk of the benefit flows to people who were already in the private system. And somehow this gets marketed as a rescue plan for ordinary families.

I do not buy it. I do not think most Texans should buy it either.

What makes all of this worse is that the political system has been engineered to protect it.

The Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United v. FEC blew open the door for unlimited independent expenditures by corporations and unions. The FEC's own guidance is plain on this point: independent expenditures are not subject to amount limitations so long as they are not coordinated with candidates.

And there it is. The closed loop.

Private companies profit from public functions.

Those companies spend money to shape politics.

Politicians protect the structures that keep the money flowing.

The public keeps paying.

Then somebody gets on television and tells you government is the problem.

No. A captured government is the problem. A government that has been turned into a delivery mechanism for private profit is the problem. A political class that uses public money to enrich connected industries and then calls the result "reform" is the problem.

I think a lot of Americans know this in their bones even if they do not always use that language. They know the hospital bill makes no sense. They know the insurance calculator is a nightmare. They know defense contractors never seem to have to tighten their belts (OR pass an audit). They know something smells off when lawmakers who claim to love public education keep finding new ways to undercut public schools. They know prisons should not be somebody's growth industry.

They know they are being played.

Privatization is the Problem. - Sara McGee

<https://sarafortextlege.substack.com/p/privatization-is-the-problem>

And I am tired of being told to ignore the obvious.

If you want to cut government spending, then start by removing the profit-taking machine that has wrapped itself around public life. Start by asking why taxpayer money has become such a dependable feeding trough for private industry. Start by asking why every public problem now comes with a consultant, a contractor, a vendor and a billionaire somewhere in the background calling it progress.

Because the spending crisis did not come from nowhere. It came from design choice. It came from ideology. It came from lawmakers who were more interested in building new revenue streams for private interests than building public systems that work.

That is what privatization has done.

It has made government more expensive, less accountable, and easier to loot.

And I think (hope) people are finally getting sick of it.

The Original Wilks and Dunn: How Oil Money, Religion, and Racism Shaped the Modern Texas Republican Party

And then they came for our schools.

The modern Texas Republican Party was not built in one election cycle. It was built over generations.

It was built by oil fortunes. It was built by segregation backlash. It was built by religious institutions that learned how to turn theology into turnout. It was built by businessmen who understood that the easiest way to protect extreme wealth was to convince working people that their real enemies were civil rights, public schools, immigrants, feminists, LGBTQ people, and the federal government.

Before Tim Dunn and Farris Wilks, there was H. L. Hunt.

Hunt was not just a rich Texas oilman with strong opinions. By the 1950s, he had become one of the most important private financiers of right-wing politics in America. He used radio, television, books, foundations, and political patronage to spread a worldview built around anti-communism, biblical conservatism, hostility to labor, and resentment toward federal civil rights enforcement.

That combination matters.

Because in Texas, anti-communism was never just about communism. "States' rights" was rarely just about states. "Local control" was rarely just about local control. In the hands of Texas's far-right donor class, those phrases became a polished political language for resisting integration, opposing civil rights, attacking public institutions and preserving an old racial and economic order.

Historian Edward H. Miller's Nut Country: Right-Wing Dallas and the Birth of the South Strategy places Dallas at the center of this transformation.

That is the beginning of the modern Texas GOP.

Not tax policy.

Not small government.

Not "family values."

The real origin story is oil money learning how to launder racial backlash through religion, media, and anti-government rhetoric.

The Hunt Blueprint

H. L. Hunt understood something that still defines Texas politics today: if you want control government, you do not just buy candidates. You build an ecosystem.

He funded media. He funded political messaging. He backed far-right causes. He elevated anti-communist paranoia. He helped normalize the idea that liberalism, civil rights, labor organizing, and secular government were all part of the same existential threat to America.

This was not random. It was strategic.

During the civil rights era, many white conservatives could no longer openly defend segregation in respectable national politics. So the language shifted.

Segregation became "local control."

Civil rights became "federal overreach."

Public education integration became “forced busing.”

Voting rights became “Washington interference.”

Economic regulation became “socialism.”

And all of it was wrapped in the language of Christian civilization under attack.

Dallas became one of the proving grounds for this new politics. Conservative businessmen, religious leaders, and political operatives helped create a politics that combined anti-communism, biblical literalism, racism, and hostility toward civil rights.

Texas did not simply become Republican because voters changed their minds about tax rates. Texas became Republican because wealthy conservatives built a political machine that fused race, religion, resentment, and money into one durable identity.

Religion Was Not a Side Issue. It Was the Delivery System.

A lot of people talk about the Southern Strategy as if it was only about race. That is incomplete.

Race was central. But religion was the delivery system that made the backlash feel righteous.

White evangelical politics gave the movement moral language. It told voters that their political preferences were not merely opinions. They were God’s will. It turned opposition to civil rights, feminism, public education, LGBTQ equality, reproductive rights, and secular government into a defense of “Christian America.”

That shift was powerful because it made compromise feel like betrayal.

If politics is just politics, you can negotiate.

If politics is spiritual warfare, your opponent is not just wrong. Your opponent is evil.

That is how donor politics became church politics. And church politics became Republican politics.

Paul Pressler and the Institutionalization of the Religious Right

This is where Paul Pressler belongs in the story.

Pressler, a Texas judge and Republican activist, was one of the central architects of conservative takeover of the Southern Baptist Convention.

The Southern Baptist Convention was not just a denomination. It was a political force waiting to be organized.

Pressler and his allies understood that controlling the SBC meant controlling seminaries, pastors, denominational boards, publications, missionary networks, and the moral vocabulary of millions of Southern Christians.

This mattered far beyond church doctrine.

The conservative resurgence hardened evangelical politics around biblical literalism, patriarchal gender roles, opposition to feminism, hostility to LGBTQ rights, and a deep suspicion of secular public institutions.

Pressler did for religious institutions what Hunt did for media and donor politics.

He helped turn a cultural ecosystem into a political machine.

Timeline: How the Machine Developed

1930s to 1940s

H. L. Hunt builds one of the largest oil fortunes in America through the East Texas boom. His wealth gives him the ability to operate not just as a businessman, but as political financier.

Hunt finances Facts Forum, an “educational” foundation that produces conservative anti-communist programming. This becomes one of the early models for privately funded ideological media.

1950s

Hunt’s programs, including Facts Forum and later Life Line, promote anti-communist Christian piety, patriotism, and right-wing politics.

1950s to 1960s

Dallas emerges as a center of far-right organizing. Businessmen, religious leaders, and political operatives help create a politics that combines anti-communism, biblical literalism, racism, and hostility toward civil rights.

1964 to 1965

The Civil Rights Act and Voting Rights Act accelerate white conservative backlash across the South. In Texas, the old conservative Democratic order begins giving way to a Republican coalition organized around anti-federal power, racial resentment, business conservatism, and religious identity.

Late 1960s to 1970s

Conservative evangelicals become increasingly politically organized. The language “Christian America” becomes a powerful way to resist feminism, desegregation, secular public education, and social change.

1978 to 1980s

Paul Pressler and his allies help launch and consolidate the conservative takeover of the Southern Baptist Convention. This gives the religious right institutional depth, turning churches and denominational networks into a long-term political force.

1990s to 2000s

Texas becomes a Republican stronghold. The state's politics increasingly reflect the fusion of oil money, evangelical organizing, anti-tax ideology, anti-regulation politics, and culture-war messaging.

2010s to 2020s

Tim Dunn and Farris Wilks emerge as the modern heirs to the Hunt model. They build a political machine made up of think tanks, media organizations, PACs, and nonprofits designed to purge Republicans whose votes they cannot rely on.

Dunn and Wilks: The Modern Version of the Same Machine

Tim Dunn and Farris Wilks are not just donors. They are system builders.

Their political network funds think tanks, school voucher organizations, activist groups, primary challengers, and media operations designed to push Texas farther right while intimidating Republicans who refuse to comply.

That pastor detail matters.

Dunn and Wilks are not just rich men buying lower taxes. Their politics are theological. Their money is tied to a worldview in which government should be reshaped around a specific conservative Christian order.

That is why their agenda so often targets public schools, universities, LGBTQ Texas, reproductive rights, and the separation of church and state.

The goal is not merely to win elections.

Public Schools Became the New Front Line

Public education is where this movement may have finally overreached.

For decades, Texas Republicans could attack “government” in the abstract while still relied on public schools, local teachers, Friday night football, agricultural programs, special education services, and neighborhood campuses as the backbone their communities.

But the voucher fight exposed the contradiction.

The Dunn-Wilks political network and its allies pushed aggressively for vouchers while simultaneously undermining trust in public education itself.

That is a dangerous game in Texas.

Because public schools are not some abstract liberal institution here. They are often the largest employer in town. They are where families gather. They are where rural communities still have a shared civic identity. They are where children with disabilities receive legally protected services that many private schools do not provide.

And now the consequences are becoming visible.

Public schools are increasingly expected to absorb the costs and administrative burdens created by voucher systems designed to weaken them.

That contradiction is becoming harder to hide.

The GOP Civil War Is the Warning Sign

The other sign that this machine may have gone too far is the open civil war inside Republican Party itself.

The Texas House speaker fight exposed a growing fracture between institutional Republicans and the hard-right donor faction.

The Paxton wars intensified it further.

For years, the threat was simple: vote with us or we will primary you.

But revenge politics creates instability.

It turns every disagreement into betrayal.

It forces lawmakers to choose between serving their districts and surviving ideological purges funded by billionaires.

That is how political machines begin to crack.

The Anti-Democratic Logic of the Machine

The throughline from Hunt to Pressler to Dunn and Wilks is not simply conservatism.

It is minority rule.

The entire project depends on a small number of wealthy men using private fortune to shape the choices available to millions of voters.

Hunt used media to manufacture ideological consent.

Pressler helped organize religious institutions into a political army.

Dunn and Wilks use PACs, nonprofits, think tanks, media outlets, and primary threats to discipline an entire state government.

The form changes. The function remains.

And the function is this: keep power concentrated by convincing ordinary people that democracy itself is dangerous unless the “right” people control it.

That is why public schools are framed as indoctrination.

That is why voting rights are framed as fraud.

That is why religious pluralism is framed as persecution.

That is why demographic change is framed as invasion.

That is why compromise is framed as surrender.

The machine cannot survive a politics of shared citizenship. It requires enemies.

How They May Have Finally Gone Too Far

For decades, this strategy worked because it separated ideology from consequences

Voters were told that attacking government would make them freer.

Then their schools became underfunded.

They were told that deregulation would make Texas stronger.

Then the grid failed, water systems deteriorated, insurance costs rose, and local governments were left trying to manage explosive growth with fewer tools.

They were told that vouchers were about “parent choice.”

Then public schools were asked to absorb the costs and burdens of systems designed to weaken them.

They were told this was about Christian values.

Then the politics became cruel, punitive, and obsessed with control.

They were told the movement represented the people.

Then it became obvious that a handful of billionaires were driving the agenda.

That is the danger point for any political machine.

A machine can survive being extreme if people believe it is fighting for them.

It can survive being rich if people believe it is accountable.

It can survive being religious if people believe it is moral.

But it cannot survive forever once people realize it is extreme, rich, unaccountable, using religion as a weapon.

That is where Texas may be now.

The voucher fight has angered public school families. The speaker fight exposed Republican divisions. The Paxton wars showed how revenge politics consumes the party from within. The growing visibility of Dunn and Wilks has made it harder to pretend this is a grassroots movement.

And the more the Christian nationalist wing pushes its agenda into public schools, courts, libraries, universities, and local governments, the more ordinary Texans beg to see the stakes.

H. L. Hunt's model depended on distance. The donor stayed behind the curtain while the message moved through radio, religion, and respectable conservative language.

But the curtain is thinner now.

Texans can see the money. They can see the networks. They can see who benefits.

They can see that the people attacking public schools are not the parents trying to get through homework at the kitchen table.

The Original Wilks and Dunn: How Oil Money, Religion, and Racism ...

How Unchecked Capitalism Led to the Obesity Epidemic

Unchecked capitalism—defined by minimal regulation and relentless profit maximization—has played a major role in driving the obesity epidemic. Through a web of interconnected mechanisms, capitalist structures have fostered an environment where unhealthy choices are easier, cheaper, and aggressively promoted. Here's how

Food Industry Profit Motives

At the heart of the issue is the food industry's focus on profitability. Corporations prioritize the production of ultra-processed foods—products high in sugar, fat, and salt, engineered to be hyper-palatable and addictive. A 2023 study published in The Lancet found that these ultra-processed foods now account for 60% of calories consumed in the U.S., a trend strongly linked to rising obesity rates (defined as BMI 30).

Moreover, capitalism's cost efficiencies make unhealthy foods significantly cheaper than nutritious options. A 2022 USDA report highlighted that while a fast food meal costs between $5 and $7, a healthier meal featuring fresh vegetables and lean protein typically costs double. This price disparity hits low-income communities the hardest, exacerbating dietary inequalities.

Marketing and Consumer Behavior

Aggressive marketing strategies further entrench unhealthy eating habits. In an unregulated advertising environment, corporations target vulnerable demographics particularly children. According to the Rudd Center for Food Policy (2021), food companies spend $13.5 billion annually on advertising, with a staggering 80% of that promoting sugary drinks and fast food. These efforts shape dietary preferences early, establishing habits that often persist into adulthood.

Additionally, companies maximize profits by increasing portion sizes. A 2020 study in the American Journal of Public Health reported that U.S. portion sizes have doubled since the 1980s, contributing to an average increase of 300 calories in daily consumption compared to 1985.

Economic Inequality and Food Deserts

Economic inequality, another byproduct of unfettered capitalism, further restricts access to healthy food. In low-income neighborhoods, convenience stores and fast food outlets dominate, while fresh produce remains scarce or prohibitively expensive. The USDA estimates that 23.5 million Americans currently live in food deserts.

Time poverty compounds the problem. The capitalist drive for productivity often forces low-wage workers into long hours, leaving little time for home-cooked meals. A 2022 Pew study found that 60% of low-income workers rely heavily on fast food due to time constraints, reinforcing unhealthy eating patterns.

Deregulation of Health Standards

Lobbying efforts by powerful food corporations have successfully weakened health regulations. Organizations like the National Restaurant Association pressure agencies such as the FDA to limit oversight of food additives and labeling. A 2021 investigation by BMJ revealed that approximately 70% of food additives used in the U.S. have not undergone rigorous safety testing, with many linked to metabolic disorders.

Efforts to introduce public health measures like soda taxes often meet fierce resistance. For instance, the American Beverage Association spent $10 million in 2016 alone to combat sugary drink taxes, prioritizing industry profits over public health.

Sedentary Lifestyles and Corporate Influence

The capitalist emphasis on efficiency has reshaped the nature of work, leading to more sedentary lifestyles. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics (2023), 80% of U.S. jobs are now desk-based, reducing daily physical activity. Meanwhile, corporations like Amazon have resisted workplace wellness initiatives if they threaten productivity.

Urban planning decisions also reflect profit motives. Car-centric infrastructures are favored over walkable cities because they benefit the automotive and construction industries. A 2024 study in Nature found that cities with lower walkability scores, such as Houston, have obesity rates 10% higher than more walkable cities like Boston.

Healthcare Industry Conflicts

Even within healthcare, capitalist incentives skew priorities toward treatment rather than prevention. Pharmaceutical companies profit immensely from drugs targeting obesity-related conditions—Ozempic, for example, generated $14 billion in sales in 2023—while often lobbying against broader public health initiatives like better food labeling. A 2022 Health Affairs study showed that only 2% of U.S. healthcare spending is allocated to preventive care, despite obesity costing the economy $1.4 trillion annually.

A Snapshot of the Crisis

- Obesity Trends: According to the CDC, U.S. adult obesity rates surged from 30% in 2000 to 41.9% in 2023, with severe obesity (BMI ≥ 40) doubling to 9.2%.
- Corporate Profits: The top 10 U.S. food corporations—including giants like PepsiCo and McDonald's—recorded combined profits of $150 billion in 2023, largely derived from ultra-processed food sales.
- Global Comparisons: Countries with stricter food regulations, such as Norway (23% obesity rate), have significantly lower obesity rates compared to the U.S., where market freedom prevails.

How Unchecked Capitalism Led to the Obesity Epidemic

<https://sarafortexlege.substack.com/p/how-unchecked-capitalism-led-to-the>

Conclusion: A Systemic Issue

While personal responsibility certainly plays a role in health outcomes, the broader context created by unchecked capitalism heavily influences individual choices. A system that prioritizes corporate profits over public health has engineered an environment where cheap, unhealthy foods dominate, exercise opportunities shrink, and preventive healthcare takes a backseat to pharmaceutical solutions.

Addressing the obesity epidemic requires systemic change: stronger regulations on food marketing, improved access to healthy foods, urban designs that encourage movement, and a shift in healthcare priorities from treatment to prevention. Until capitalism's excesses are curbed, obesity will remain a predictable consequence of a profit-driven society.

Unchecked Capitalism Is Destroying the American Middle Class

Capitalism is at its best with guardrails. Those have been demolished.

For decades, Americans have been told a simple story: if we let the free market run without interference, everyone will prosper. Government regulation, we're warned, just a slippery slope to socialism. That narrative has been repeated so often that many people treat it as truth.

But look around. Wages have been stagnant for forty years. Housing, health care, and higher education have become unaffordable for huge portions of the population. The middle class - the foundation of American prosperity - is shrinking. Meanwhile, the wealthiest Americans have seen their fortunes explode.

Thanks for reading! Subscribe for free to receive

What we are witnessing is unchecked capitalism, and it is slowly strangling the very economic engine it claims to protect.

The Myth That Restraint Equals Socialism

Whenever anyone suggests reining in corporate power, the same argument appears: "This is socialism!" That word has become a scare tactic. The truth is that there is a wide range of economic systems between pure laissez-faire capitalism and state-controlled socialism.

The U.S. has always existed in that middle ground. We had antitrust laws to prevent monopolies. We had strong unions that gave workers bargaining power. We had progressive taxes that kept wealth from concentrating at the very top. And yet no one called the America of the 1950s and 60s - when the middle class was at its strongest - a socialist state.

Calling every form of regulation “socialism” is a lie told by the oligarchs and their lobbyists to protect their dominance. It convinces ordinary Americans to defend a system that no longer defends them.

How Unchecked Capitalism Erodes the Middle Class

When companies are allowed to maximize profits without guardrails, several predictable things happen:

- Wages stagnate. Productivity has soared since 1980, but wages have barely moved. The gap between worker output and pay is the largest in modern history.
- Costs rise faster than income. Housing prices, healthcare premiums, and tuition have all grown far faster than inflation, leaving middle-class families squeezed.
- Wealth concentrates. The richest 1% now control more wealth than the entire middle class combined. That isn't a free market - it's a captured one.
- Short-term profit becomes the only goal. Investment in workers, communities, and long-term innovation takes a back seat to quarterly earnings.

This is not healthy capitalism. This is a system eating itself.

A Balanced Approach

Capitalism can work - but only if it operates within a structure that balances profit with the common good. That structure has been dismantled piece by piece over the last four decades.

Rebuilding it doesn't mean government takeover of industry. It means:

- Restoring competition by enforcing antitrust laws and breaking up monopolies that dominate entire markets.
- Investing in people with universal healthcare, strong public education, and affordable childcare - so that businesses are not burdened with these costs and workers aren't crushed by them.
- Modernizing taxes so the largest corporations and wealthiest individuals contribute their fair share instead of exploiting loopholes.
- Strengthening worker voice through updated labor laws and collective bargaining rights.

These measures don't kill capitalism. They keep it alive.

The Stakes

We are at a crossroads. If we continue down the path of unchecked capitalism, the middle class will keep shrinking until the "American Dream" is little more than a memory. And when people lose faith that the system works for them, history shows what comes next: instability, anger, and the rise of truly radical alternatives.

The choice isn't between free-market chaos and authoritarian socialism. The choice is whether we have the courage to create a balanced economy where growth benefits everyone, not just the very top.

For too long, the powerful have convinced us that any limits on them are an attack on freedom. In reality, it's the absence of limits that has left so many Americans less free, trapped by stagnant wages, rising costs, and shrinking opportunity.

It doesn't have to be this way. The middle ground exists. We built it once. We can b

How Regressive Tax Policy and Unchecked Capitalism Are Fueling America's Deepest Crisis

Capitalism has played a central role in the development of the United States. It has driven innovation, expanded markets, lifted millions out of poverty, and helped build the world's largest economy. From the industrial revolution to the tech boom, capitalist enterprise has rewarded ambition, incentivized hard work, and enabled generational wealth-building for many. It has made America a hub for invention, entrepreneurship, and global influence. But while capitalism has produced undeniable benefits, its excesses - when left unchecked and combined with regressive tax policies - have created a new set of crises that threaten the stability and well-being of the very society it once helped build.

Wage Suppression: Profit Over People

For decades, wages for most Americans have remained flat while worker productivity has soared. According to the Economic Policy Institute, from 1979 to 2020, productivity rose by 61.8%, yet hourly pay for the typical worker rose only 17.5%. Because profits from this increased productivity have been funneled to executives and shareholders, not to the labor force driving the growth.

How Regressive Tax Policy and Unchecked Capitalism Are Fueling Am... <https://sarafortexlege.substack.com/p/how-regressive-tax-policy-and-un...>

This is no accident. It's a product of an economic system in which capital is prioritized over labor. Deregulation, attacks on unions, and tax cuts for the wealthy have disempowered workers. The federal minimum wage, stuck at $7.25 since 2009, has less buying power today than at any point since the 1950s. This suppression is a direct consequence of a capitalist framework that values profit maximization over equitable compensation.

Housing Shortages and Unaffordability: A Market Failure by Design

The U.S. housing market has been warped by investor-driven capitalism. Large private equity firms and hedge funds have snapped up homes across the country, converting them into high-rent properties or holding them vacant for speculation. In 2022, one out of every seven homes sold was bought by an investor.

Instead of treating housing as a human right, the U.S. treats it as a commodity - one that is increasingly out of reach for working families. Regressive property tax systems combined with underinvestment in public housing, have left millions vulnerable. Local zoning laws, often influenced by wealthy homeowners and developers, restrict the supply of affordable units, driving prices even higher.

Male Loneliness: A Byproduct of Economic Alienation

The growing crisis of male loneliness is often framed as a cultural or emotional issue, but its roots are deeply economic. Traditional pathways to meaning - steady jobs, homeownership, family life - have been steadily eroded by decades of neoliberal economic policy.

As men lose access to stable employment and social institutions deteriorate under austerity, isolation grows. Capitalism's relentless individualism and the decline of public spaces have made it harder to form and sustain relationships. Sociologist Robert Putnam highlighted this trend decades ago in Bowling Alone - but it has only worsened as public investment has withered.

Food Insecurity: Hunger in the Land of Plenty

Despite being one of the wealthiest nations on Earth, over 44 million Americans, including 13 million children, live in food-insecure households. This paradox can be traced to both corporate consolidation in agriculture and a gutted social safety net.

Companies like Kroger and Walmart dominate food distribution, while farm subsidies favor large agribusiness over small producers. Meanwhile, tax cuts for the wealthy have led to chronic underfunding of SNAP and other nutrition programs. Hunger persists not because of scarcity - but because of policy choices rooted in capitalist priorities.

Poor Health Outcomes and Obesity: Profiting off Sickness

The U.S. spends more on health care than any other developed country, yet its citizens live shorter, sicker lives. Why? Because the American health system is not designed to keep people healthy - it's designed to generate profit. Pharmaceutical companies, insurance giants, and hospital chains extract billions from a fragmented and inefficient system.

Obesity, particularly among low-income communities, is exacerbated by food deserts, predatory marketing, and the dominance of ultra-processed food - all industries that profit handsomely from these trends. Regressive tax policy ensures that public health interventions remain underfunded while corporate subsidies thrive.

How Regressive Tax Policy and Unchecked Capitalism Are Fueling Am... <https://sarafortexlege.substack.com/p/how-regressive-tax-policy-and-un...>

Unaffordable Medical Care: Capitalism in Crisis Mode

Medical debt is the leading cause of bankruptcy in the U.S. Millions go uninsured and underinsured, and even those with coverage often delay care due to high deductibles and copays. This isn't a bug - it's a feature of a system where health is a commodity, and well-being is secondary to shareholder returns.

The Affordable Care Act took some steps toward mitigation, but without universal health care or stronger regulation, market forces continue to exploit illness for profit. Tax policy that shields corporate wealth only deepens this inequity, starving public health infrastructure in favor of private gain.

Education Failures: A System Designed for Inequality

American public education is financed largely by local property taxes, meaning that wealthy communities get well-funded schools while poor ones struggle. This creates a two-tiered education system that entrenches inequality.

Meanwhile, decades of tax cuts at the state and federal levels have slashed education budgets, forcing schools to rely on standardized testing, overworked teachers, and crumbling facilities. Charter schools and voucher programs siphon resources away from public education, deepening the divide. Under capitalism, education becomes a public good - but a private investment with unequal returns.

Declining Birth Rate: The Cost of Living in a Broken System

The U.S. birth rate has fallen to its lowest point in history. While some celebrate this as personal choice, many potential parents cite economic precarity as a key deterrent.

How Regressive Tax Policy and Unchecked Capitalism Are Fueling Am... <https://sarafortextlege.substack.com/p/how-regressive-tax-policy-and-un...>

The high cost of housing, child care, medical care, and education all make family formation daunting or impossible.

This is not an individual failure - it's the result of a system that externalizes the costs of reproduction while expecting individuals to absorb the burden. Unlike other wealthy nations, the U.S. lacks universal paid family leave, subsidized child care, or guaranteed health care. Capitalism has made having children too expensive for many, while regressive tax policy ensures the government won't help.

Conclusion: The Price of Profit

Each of these crises - economic, social, and personal - can be traced to the same root system where markets are allowed to run wild, public investment is slashed to subsidize private profit, and tax policy favors the ultra-rich at the expense of everyone else.

Unchecked capitalism, married to regressive taxation, has hollowed out the American Dream. Reversing these trends will require not just policy tweaks, but a fundamental reimagining of what government, the economy, and society owe to their people.

The Crisis of Male Loneliness: How Unchecked Capitalism and Reactionary Politics Are Isolating a Generation

Republican policies are hurting young men - it's time to place the blame where it belongs

In recent years, the crisis of male loneliness has become a growing public concern. Across the United States and much of the developed world, men — especially young and working-class men — report higher levels of isolation, fewer close friendships, and declining relationship prospects. Popular narratives often attribute this to individual failure, cultural shifts, or even technological change. But these explanations only scratch the surface. To fully understand the roots of this epidemic, we must look deeper — specifically at how unchecked capitalism, wage stagnation, and a fraying social contract have disproportionately harmed men. Adding to this crisis is the rise of reactionary political alignments that alienate potential partners and entrench social divides, creating a self-perpetuating cycle of isolation.

I. The Economic Roots of Male Disconnection

Thanks for reading! Subscribe for free to receive new posts and support my work.

Wage Suppression and the Vanishing Promise of Breadwinning

Over the past four decades, real wages for most American men — particularly those without college degrees — have remained stagnant or declined. The economic shift from industrial labor to service and information economies has decimated traditional male-dominated fields like manufacturing and construction. Globalization, de-unionization, and the rise of gig work have gutted worker bargaining power, while corporate profits soar.

In many ways, the cultural ideal of the male breadwinner has persisted longer than economic structure that supported it. Men are still judged, both by themselves and others, on their ability to provide. But with homeownership increasingly out of reach, wages failing to match inflation, and job security eroding, many men are left feeling like failures — not due to a lack of ambition, but because the economic system no longer rewards traditional male labor.

Housing Costs and Social Atomization

Housing plays a critical role in the story. The cost of renting or buying a home has skyrocketed, especially in metropolitan areas where jobs are concentrated. For younger men, this means living with parents longer, delaying independence, and reducing opportunities for romantic relationships. For working-class men, unstable housing or multiple roommates can be a deterrent to forming families.

Moreover, stable housing used to anchor communities. The loss of affordable home has led to increased transience, disrupted social ties, and weakened local institutions. These are the very networks — churches, sports leagues, neighborhood groups — that once supported male friendships and social belonging.

II. The Collapse of Male Social Infrastructure

Fewer Friendships, Less Emotional Expression

Men are socially conditioned to avoid vulnerability and emotional expression, relying instead on activity-based friendships — work, sports, shared hobbies. As work becomes more isolating and communities more fragmented, those friendships beco harder to maintain. Studies show that since the 1990s, the number of men reporting zero close friends has more than quintupled.

Social disconnection isn't just emotionally painful — it's physically dangerous. Loneliness has been linked to higher rates of heart disease, addiction, and suicide. And men are less likely than women to seek help for mental health issues. The male loneliness epidemic, then, is not only a crisis of companionship but a public health emergency.

III. Political Backlash and the Dating Disconnect

Reactionary Responses to Vulnerability

Faced with declining economic prospects and rising isolation, some men have gravitated toward political movements that offer a sense of identity, strength, and control. These movements often direct male frustration not at the architects of economic inequality, but at feminists, immigrants, or progressive values.

Right-wing pundits and influencers — particularly online — have exploited this vacuum, offering simplistic narratives: men are alone because women have become “too independent,” “too promiscuous,” or “too empowered.” Instead of solidarity or systemic reform, these narratives promote grievance and control — especially over women's autonomy.

Backlash Breeds Isolation

This reactionary turn has tangible social consequences. Men who embrace ideology hostile to women's rights are often the same men struggling to find romantic partners. And it's no mystery why: most women are uninterested in men who oppose their bodily autonomy, reject gender equality, or view feminism as an enemy. Aligning with political movements that seek to restrict abortion access, undermine workplace protections, or dismiss sexual harassment alienates the very people men hope to connect with.

What's more, reactionary beliefs about gender roles no longer align with modern relationship dynamics. Today, most women expect partners who share domestic labor, respect boundaries, and value equality. Men who cling to outdated, patriarchal notions of dominance find themselves increasingly left behind.

IV. Breaking the Cycle: Toward a Healthier Model of Masculinity

Solving the male loneliness epidemic requires more than just encouraging men to "open up." It demands a structural reckoning with the economic system that has hollowed out working-class life, destabilized communities, and reduced the value of labor. It also requires a cultural reckoning with the toxic versions of masculinity peddled by reactionary movements — ideologies that promise strength but deliver only further isolation.

The path forward lies in rebuilding social infrastructure: supporting unionization, investing in mental health, making housing more affordable, and creating communal spaces where men can form genuine, non-transactional relationships. It means embracing new models of masculinity — ones rooted in empathy, interdependence, and equality. And perhaps most critically, it involves rejecting the seductive pull of politics that thrive on grievance and division, and instead seeking solidarity in the shared struggle for a better, more humane world.

Conclusion

The epidemic of male loneliness is not a failure of individual men. It is a failure of an economic system that exploits them and a political culture that misleads them. Until we address both — the capitalist conditions that have eroded male social and economic standing, and the political forces that drive them away from healthy relationships — the crisis will only deepen. The way out is not through domination or nostalgia for a bygone era, but through community, dignity, and mutual respect.

The Economic Case for Universal Healthcare in the United States

Implementing universal healthcare in the United States—particularly through a single-payer model like Medicare for All—has the potential to transform not only the nation's health outcomes but also its economic future. A growing body of research supports this approach, highlighting substantial cost savings, improved population health, and broader economic benefits. Here's a comprehensive look at why universal healthcare makes fiscal and social sense.

1. Direct Cost Savings from a Single-Payer System

A single-payer system streamlines healthcare financing, eliminating the inefficiency of America's fragmented, multi-payer model. Three main areas stand out for potential savings:

Thanks for reading! Subscribe for free to receive new posts and support my work.

Subscribe

- Lower Administrative Costs: U.S. hospitals spend over 25% of their budgets on administration, compared to just 12% in Canada's single-payer system. A 2020 Lancet study estimated that Medicare for All could cut national healthcare spending by 13.1%—or $458 billion annually—by simplifying billing and oversight processes.
- Negotiated Drug Prices: The U.S. pays significantly more for pharmaceuticals than countries with single-payer systems, which negotiate prices. The Political Economy Research Institute (PERI) projected that negotiating prices under Medicare for All could help save up to $5 trillion over ten years.

- Hospitalization Costs During COVID-19: According to a 2022 Yale study in PN universal healthcare could have saved $105.6 billion in COVID-related hospitalization costs alone, and $438 billion annually in a typical year through improved efficiency and access.

2. Improved Health Outcomes and Lives Saved

Universal healthcare removes financial barriers to care, allowing people to seek preventive treatment and manage chronic conditions early—before they become more serious and costly.

- Lives Saved: The Yale study estimated that 338,594 lives could have been saved during the pandemic with universal healthcare. Long-term, it could prevent 211,897 deaths annually from both COVID and other causes. The Lancet estimated that universal coverage would save 68,000 lives and 1.73 million life-years every year.
- Chronic Disease Prevention: Without insurance, many delay treatment for manageable diseases like diabetes or heart disease. Universal care incentivizes early intervention, reducing long-term costs and suffering.
- Reducing Health Disparities: Marginalized communities suffer disproportionately from preventable illnesses. A 2023 Health and Human Rights study found that universal systems can significantly improve outcomes for low-income and minority populations, advancing equity and economic inclusion.

3. A Healthier Population Means a Stronger Economy

Beyond healthcare itself, a healthier society fuels economic productivity, supports families, and strengthens businesses.

- Higher Productivity and GDP: A 2020 Frontiers in Public Health study found that better healthcare correlates with stronger economic indicators. The Council of Economic Advisers projected that slowing healthcare cost growth by just 1.5% annually could increase GDP by 2% by 2020 and 8% by 2030.
- Labor Mobility and Entrepreneurship: Universal coverage breaks the link between employment and insurance, ending “job lock.” Workers are freer to change jobs, start businesses without fear of losing coverage. Brookings research suggests that mobility could benefit workers and firms by up to 25%.
- Poverty Reduction: High medical costs push millions into poverty each year. Universal coverage protects families from financial ruin and allows them to invest in housing, education, or retirement. A 2023 PMC study emphasized that healthcare equity also helps reduce the nation’s massive wealth gap.
- Stimulating Small Business: A California study estimated that switching to a single-payer system funded by a modest corporate tax and sales tax could save businesses up to 22% in healthcare costs—effectively acting as an economic stimulus.

4. Addressing Concerns About Upfront Costs

Critics warn that universal healthcare could cost $32–44 trillion over a decade. However, these figures often ignore the system-wide savings that would offset those costs.

- Net Savings Confirmed: Even the conservative-leaning Mercatus Center found that Medicare for All would save $2 trillion over 10 years. The Congressional Budget Office projected overall reductions in healthcare spending through cost controls and elimination of private premiums.
- Feasible Funding Models: Proposals include a 7.5% payroll tax and a 4% income tax, with higher brackets for wealthier individuals. Most families would pay less overall than they do under the current system of premiums, deductibles, and copays.

- Global Comparison: The U.S. spends 17.1% of its GDP on healthcare—far more than Germany (11.2%) or the UK (9.6%)—yet achieves worse outcomes, including the lowest life expectancy and highest infant and maternal mortality among nations.

5. Social and Global Implications

Universal healthcare aligns with international best practices and broader goals of economic and social development.

- Human Capital Development: Healthy children are better learners, and healthy adults are more productive workers. This unlocks long-term economic growth across generations.
- Equity and Inclusion: Universal coverage disproportionately benefits historical disadvantaged groups—Black, Indigenous, and low-income Americans—closing gaps that lead to preventable deaths and economic loss.
- Preparedness for Future Crises: During the COVID-19 pandemic, over 9 million Americans lost health coverage due to job loss. A universal system would decouple healthcare from employment, ensuring stability during economic downturns or future pandemics.

Conclusion: A Fiscal and Moral Imperative

Universal healthcare—especially a single-payer model like Medicare for All—represents a rare policy opportunity that is both economically sound and morally urgent. Studies from The Lancet, Yale, PERI, and even the Mercatus Center agree: the U.S. could save hundreds of billions of dollars annually, reduce preventable deaths by the tens of thousands, and unlock massive economic potential.

In a time of rising inequality, unaffordable care, and vulnerable public health, the evidence overwhelmingly supports the transition to a system that prioritizes health equity, and long-term economic resilience.

How Legalizing Cannabis in Texas Could Help Lower Property Taxes

A detailed review of how allowing more freedom could also free up our wallets

SARA MCGEE

Sh

Legalizing cannabis in Texas isn't just a matter of personal freedom or criminal justice reform—it could also bring real economic benefits, particularly in easing the state's high property tax burden. By generating new tax revenue and cutting law enforcement and incarceration costs, legalization could free up hundreds of millions of dollars annually. These savings and earnings could then be redirected to fund local services, reducing the need to rely so heavily on property taxes.

This article explores how cannabis legalization could financially benefit Texas homeowners, using lessons from other states, economic principles, and Texas-specific context.

Thanks for reading! Subscribe for free to receive
new posts and support my work.

1. Cannabis Sales Tax Revenue: A New Stream for Texas

Turning Cannabis Into Revenue

Legalizing and regulating cannabis sales allows governments to tax these transactions—much like alcohol or tobacco. In states like Colorado and Washington, this has produced substantial windfalls:

- Colorado: Over $2.4 billion collected since 2014.
- Washington: $4.1 billion in taxes by the end of 2023.

With a much larger population—about 30 million compared to Colorado’s 5.8 million—Texas could generate even more. Conservative estimates suggest annual tax revenue could exceed $500 million, depending on market size and tax structure.

A past Texas bill, House Bill 447 (2020), proposed a 10% sales tax on cannabis, with proceeds directed toward public schools, teacher pensions, and local governments. Such an approach could directly reduce the need for higher property taxes.

Reducing Reliance on Property Taxes

Property taxes are the primary funding source for local governments and school districts in Texas. Rates can exceed 2% of property value, putting pressure on homeowners. Cannabis tax revenue could offset some of these costs:

- Dallas County: A share of $100 million in statewide cannabis tax revenue could cover 6% of its $1.6 billion budget—potentially reducing property tax rates by a similar amount.
- School Districts: With limited state funding, Texas school districts rely heavily on local property taxes. If cannabis taxes were directed to schools, it could ease the burden.

Tax Design Matters

The amount of revenue depends heavily on tax structure:

- Ad valorem taxes (based on price) are more stable than weight-based taxes, which can encourage more potent products and shrink the taxable base.
- Overly high tax rates can push buyers to the black market, reducing legal sales tax collections. A moderate tax rate (10–15%) would help balance revenue generation with market competitiveness.

2. Law Enforcement and Incarceration: The Cost of Prohibition

The Price of Policing Cannabis

Texas leads the nation in cannabis-related arrests, with more than 23,000 arrests in 2023—mostly for simple possession. Each arrest can cost thousands in police time, court proceedings, and potential incarceration:

- Arrest Costs: $1,000–$5,000 per arrest.
- Incarceration Costs: $24,000 per inmate annually.

In 2018, there were nearly 63,000 arrests, costing an estimated $200–$300 million before the 2019 hemp law reduced prosecutions.

Potential Savings from Legalization

States that have legalized cannabis saw significant drops in arrests, freeing up law enforcement budgets:

- Arrest Reductions: If legalization cuts Texas arrests by 80%, it could save $50–$ million annually.
- Incarceration: Reducing cannabis-related jail time could save another $24 milli if 1,000 fewer people are jailed annually.
- Total Savings: A realistic range is $75–$150 million per year, money that could instead be used to lower local tax burdens.

Reducing Property Tax Pressures

Local law enforcement is largely funded by property taxes. Cutting cannabis enforcement costs would allow counties to reallocate funds or reduce tax rates:

- Harris County Example: A $20 million enforcement reduction in the sheriff's $100 million budget could translate to a 3–5% property tax cut, depending on overall spending levels.

Some states also reinvest cannabis savings in communities most impacted by prohibition. Illinois, for instance, directs 25% of cannabis taxes to disadvantaged communities, helping reduce long-term public safety and welfare costs.

3. Combined Impact: Revenue + Savings = Relief

Statewide Financial Impact

If Texas legalized cannabis and achieved:

- $500 million in annual tax revenue, and
- $75–$150 million in enforcement savings,

... the state could free up $575–$650 million per year. If half of this were allocated to local governments and school districts, that's $300–$325 million that could directly offset property taxes.

What Does That Mean for Homeowners?

Texas's total property tax levy was $73 billion in 2022. While $300 million is a small fraction (0.4%), it still translates into real savings:

- Statewide: A typical homeowner with a $300,000 property might save $24 per year.
- Travis County (Austin): A $30 million cannabis tax allocation could cut property tax rates by 0.43%, saving $129 on a $300,000 home.

If the state prioritized tax relief over new spending, or targeted funds toward high-tax areas, savings could be more significant.

4. Long-Term Economic Benefits

Legalization could offer compounding advantages over time:

- Budget Stability: Consistent cannabis revenue could help stabilize local budget and avoid future tax hikes.
- Job Creation: A legal cannabis industry would create jobs in retail, cultivation, processing, and more—boosting local economies and expanding the property tax base.
- Reduced Recidivism: Lower incarceration rates could reduce social costs over the long term, further stabilizing public budgets.

5. Texas-Specific Challenges and Context

Political Resistance

Despite broad public support (62% of Texans favor full legalization), the state's political leadership remains opposed. Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick and others have blocked legalization efforts, including HB 447. Still, local decriminalization initiatives in cities like Austin and Dallas signal growing momentum.

Federal Legal Barriers

Because cannabis is still a Schedule I drug under federal law, cannabis businesses face challenges with banking and tax compliance. However, a proposed reclassification to Schedule III could ease restrictions, making legal markets more efficient and profitable.

Past Progress

Texas's 2019 hemp law significantly reduced cannabis-related arrests by complicating prosecutions. Full legalization would expand those cost savings, showing the state already has a financial incentive to go further.

Conclusion: A Path to Property Tax Relief

Legalizing cannabis in Texas could yield over $500 million in tax revenue and $75–$ million in enforcement savings annually. While these numbers won't eliminate property taxes, they could support meaningful reductions—especially in high-tax and/or underfunded districts.

For Texas homeowners frustrated by rising property tax bills, cannabis legalization offers a pragmatic, data-backed option to provide relief. But to realize these benefits, lawmakers would need to craft a moderate, efficient tax structure and commit to allocating revenues and savings toward tax reduction—not just new spending.

With smart policy design and political will, cannabis could be more than just a new industry for Texas—it could be a pathway to long-term fiscal stability and lower property taxes.

Reinventing Texas Taxation: A Path to Eliminating Homeowner Property Taxes

SARA MCGEE
MAY 27, 2025

Sh

Texas is growing, dynamic, and proud of its no-income-tax, pro-growth reputation. But skyrocketing property taxes, particularly on primary residences, are becoming a burden — especially for lower- and middle-income families. As housing values soar, many Texans are being taxed out of their homes.

This plan outlines a bold but responsible roadmap to eliminate property taxes on primary residences, while keeping Texas competitive and ensuring stable, equitable funding for public services. It does so by modernizing the state's revenue system — including regulated cannabis, expanded gambling, and sin tax reform.

Policy Goals

1. Eliminate property taxes on primary residences
2. Protect low- and fixed-income homeowners
3. Fully fund public education — no vouchers
4. Maintain a competitive business climate
5. Modernize revenue sources to meet 21st-century needs

Fiscal Snapshot (2025 Estimates)

Target: Eliminate ~$34 Billion in Residential Property Taxes

Estimated Revenue Replacement Sources

Source	Revenue Potential (Annual)
Sales tax increase (up to 2%)	$14-18B
Broaden tax base (luxury services)	$5-8B
Legalized cannabis (taxes + licensing)	$1.5-2.5B
Expanded gambling (casinos, online betting)	$2-3B
Increased sin taxes (alcohol, tobacco, vaping)	$1.5-2B
Oil & gas revenue surplus	$1.5-2B
Local optional service fees	$2-4B
Government efficiency & school district audits	$1.5-2B
Education Endowment (investment returns)	$1-1.5B

 15-Year Transition Plan
Years 1-3: Freeze, Reform, and Build the Case

- Freeze property tax increases on primary residences for low- and middle-income homeowners
- Expand homestead exemptions and income-based circuit breakers
- Begin public audits of school and local government spending
- Draft and promote enabling legislation for:
 - Cannabis legalization
 - Regulated casino gambling
 - Sports betting
 - Sin tax increases (alcohol, tobacco, vapes)

Years 4-7: Start Revenue Replacement

- Incrementally raise state sales tax from 6.25% to 7.25%

- Broaden tax base to include luxury services
- Legalize cannabis, with excise taxes, licensing fees, and agricultural incentives
- Authorize casinos and mobile betting with tightly regulated tax regimes
- Increase sin taxes by:
 - $1/pack tobacco
 - 20% tax on vaping products
 - 10–15% increase on liquor/beer excise taxes

Revenue from these new sources begins funding a “Property Tax Reduction Fund.”

Years 8–12: Shift Education Funding to State

- Raise sales tax to 8.25% only if necessary
- State gradually assumes full funding for K-12 public education
- Establish an Education Endowment Fund, seeded with oil & gas royalties and cannabis/gambling revenues
- Local governments begin replacing property tax with means-tested service fees (e.g., trash collection, street lighting)

Years 13–15: Final Phaseout of Property Tax on Homes

- Full elimination of property tax on primary residences
- Taxes remain for:
 - Commercial property
 - Second homes, vacation homes
 - Vacant land and speculative real estate

Safeguards for Lower-Income Texans

Equity Protections for Low-Income Texans

Policy	Impact
Homestead exemption increase	Shields more home value from taxes
Income-based tax caps	No homeowner pays >5% of income in taxes
Sales tax exemptions	Food, rent, medicine remain untaxed
State EITC expansion (if needed)	Offsets regressive tax effects
Utility and service fee waivers	Protect low-income households from new fees

 Education: Fully Funded, Public, and Protected

- No vouchers, no privatization
- Constitutionally guaranteed per-student minimums, inflation-adjusted
- Endowment covers economic downturns or unstable revenue years
- Push for school district consolidation, shared administrative services
- Invest in:
 - Early childhood education
 - Teacher development and retention

 Business Competitiveness Secured

- No state income tax — preserved
- No corporate tax increase
- Real estate and investment costs remain low
- Regulated cannabis and gambling open new markets and create tens of thousands of jobs
- Stable education funding strengthens workforce quality

 Why Now?

Texas can no longer afford a 20th-century tax system in a 21st-century economy. The plan eliminates property taxes for homeowners without sacrificing schools or services. It achieves this by legalizing and taxing modern industries, reforming outdated revenue models, and protecting those who need it most.

 Summary Table: Revenue Modernization

Summary of New Revenue Sources and Legal Actions

New Revenue Source	Legal Status (2025)	Action Needed	Est. Annual Yield
Cannabis	Illegal	Legalize & tax	$1.5-2.5B
Casino gambling	Illegal	Legalize via amendment	$2-3B
Sports betting	Illegal	Enable via legislation	$0.5-1B
Sin tax increases	Low/moderate	Legislative action	$1.5-2B
Sales tax (2% raise)	Legal	Legislative approval	$14-18B
Broaden tax base	Legal	Reform exemptions	$5-8B
Local fees	Legal	Enable via city policy	$2-4B
Oil & gas royalties	Legal	Allocate surplus	$1.5-2B
Efficiency & audits	Legal	Mandate audits	$1.5-2B
Endowment fund	Legal	Create and seed	$1-1.5B

 Final Word

Texas can lead the nation in tax innovation, homeowner relief, and modern economic development — all without sacrificing the core values of freedom, prosperity, and opportunity. This is a vision for a freer, fairer Texas that works for every homeowner, every student, and every future generation.

Legalize Sports Betting

Keep Texas money in Texas

Texas is missing out on a golden opportunity.

Legalizing sports betting would bring in millions in tax revenue—funds we could use to boost education, infrastructure, and public safety. Look at states like New Jersey and Colorado: they’ve turned betting into a cash cow while keeping it safe and regulated.

Texans already love sports—football, basketball, you name it. Why force fans to take their money to shady offshore sites or neighboring states when we can keep it here, create jobs, and support local businesses?

Opponents might worry about addiction, but we’ve got the tools to regulate it right—age checks, limits, and support programs. It’s not about Americans have taken an increasingly dim view of sports betting in the seven years since the Supreme Court overturned a federal ban, as online wagers have skyrocketed, igniting concerns over the personal and social costs.

According to a recent poll from the Pew Research Center, 43 percent of U.S. adults say the fact that sports betting is now legal in much of the country is a bad thing for society. That's up from 34 percent in 2022.

Harvard experts and others suggest that gambling addiction appears to be growing as a public health concern for individuals, and some see the likelihood of wider economic fallout.

Counselors have reported an growing number of patients with gambling problems. And a February study in JAMA Internal Medicine noted that internet searches for gambling-addiction help have risen 23 percent nationally from the 2018 court ruling through June 2024.

"When new forms of gambling appear, the rate of savings go down, then you see the rate of credit card defaults going up. And you see the rate of mortgage defaults going up. So these are long-term financial and societal costs with broad implications," said Malcolm Sparrow, professor of the practice of public management at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

"Having it on your phone with push notifications and constant advertisements is able to kind of hijack your brain in a really fascinating way. Before, you'd have to drive to a casino, and I think that served as a bit of a barrier."

— Spencer Andrews

In the U.S., the floodgates for sports betting were opened in 2018 following a Supreme Court decision to overturn a federal sports gambling ban and turn over regulation to state governments. Currently, 39 U.S. states have passed legislation legalizing sports betting in some form.

The JAMA study found that total sports wagers increased from $4.9 billion during 2017 to $121.1 billion during 2023, with 94 percent of wagers during 2023 being placed online.

“It takes between five and seven years before countries become more painfully aware of all the misery that increased access wreaks on public health, public finances, and so on,” said Sparrow, much of whose work involves studying the regulation of societal risks, including gambling.

The initial push for legalization stemmed from a desire for state governments to create an alternate form of tax revenue. Lobbyists for sports betting companies have downplayed the addictive nature of the behavior, experts say.

“It made a lot of sense to do. It was popular, and everyone was going to make money off of it,” said Spencer Andrews, a student fellow at Harvard’s Petrie-Flom Center. Andrews, who spent several years as a research fellow at the National Institutes of Health, is the author of a two-part series for the Bill of Health Blog regarding the dangers of sports gambling.

“I just think it was a short-sighted decision,” he said. “In the end, as ubiquitous as it is now, it’s clearly gotten out of hand.”

In his series Andrews picks up on an aspect of sports betting that, according to psychologists, lends itself to addictive behavior.

“Having it on your phone with push notifications and constant advertisements is able to kind of hijack your brain in a really fascinating way,” he said. “Before, you’d have to drive to a casino, and I think that served as a bit of a barrier.”

Debi LaPlante, director of the Division on Addiction at the Cambridge Health Alliance and an associate professor of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School, said she thinks it may be hard for clinicians to spot and treat negative sports betting behaviors because most have so little experience with it.

“Many healthcare providers don’t have the knowledge, skills, or tools to address gambling-related problems among their clients and patients,” she said.

LaPlante suggests making screening for gambling widely available for healthcare professionals to better connect people to help.

Sports betting worries grow as wagers skyrocket— Harvard Gazette

<https://news.harvard.edu/gazette/story/2026/01/sports-betting-worries-g...>

Sparrow added that research suggests that even mild participation in sports betting may be harmful.

“We suspect up to 50 percent of gamblers suffer some degree of harm and regret, and a much broader definition say it’s having an adverse effect on their life, and they’ve tried to stop but can’t,” he said. “Now that’s not enough to get you designated as a problem gambler, but it still means it’s having a lasting detrimental effect in one dimension of life or another.”

Some safeguards have been implemented in recent years. Some sports betting apps allow users to set loss limits, and nearly every advertisement for sports betting across the U.S. is accompanied by addiction helpline information.

Andrews added that banning advertising during sports events may help state governments cut down on risky betting.

“It’s kind of like a cigarette brand advertising at a nicotine lovers conference or something. It’s a cheat code,” he said. “At the end of the day, the government owes their consumers a protection from being led astray by private interests. And I think taking a step back and letting anything happen here is just not the answer.”

Sparrow said another strategy is for states that haven’t approved online sports betting to stand firm.

“The industry would like to have us all believe that it’s inevitable all 50 will get there eventually,” he said. “The economic benefits are grossly over-emphasized in the policy debates leading up to legalization or increased legalization, and that’s a deliberate tactic on behalf of the industry.”

CASINOS, CRIME, AND COMMUNITY COSTS

Earl L. Grinols and David B. Mustard*

Abstract—We examine the relationship between casinos and crime using county-level data for the United States between 1977 and 1996. Casinos were nonexistent outside Nevada before 1978, and expanded to many other states during our sample period. Most factors that reduce crime occur before or shortly after a casino opens, whereas those that increase crime, including problem and pathological gambling, occur over time. The results suggest that the effect on crime is low shortly after a casino opens, and grows over time. Roughly 8% of crime in casino counties in 1996 was attributable to casinos, costing the average adult $75 per year.

1. Introduction

PRIOR to 1978, there were no casinos in the United States outside Nevada. Since 1990, casinos have expanded to the point where the vast majority of Americans now have relatively easy access to one. This paper utilizes the natural experiment created by casino openings to examine how casinos affect crime. There are many reasons why understanding this link is particularly valuable. First, the casino industry has grown rapidly in the last decade and has become one of the most controversial and influential industries. Commercial casino revenues increased 203% from $8.7 billion to $26.3 billion between 1990 and 2000. Including Class III American Indian casinos, revenues were $38.8 billion, or $200 per adult, in 2001. Casino industry revenues are comparable to those of the cigarette market, and all forms of gambling total more than seven times the amount spent on theater tickets.¹ From 1982 to 2000, GDP increased 201% while casino revenues increased more than 600%. This rapid expansion generated extensive debate about the impact of casinos on many social, economic, and political issues.²

Second, the casino industry has become a major lobbying presence. Between 1992 and 1997, $100 million was paid in lobbying fees and donations to state legislators (Harvard Medical School, 1997). Concerns were sufficiently pronounced that the U.S. Congress established the National Gambling Impact Study Commission (NGISC) in 1996 to study casinos exhaustively. Its final report called for additional research about the effects of casinos and a moratorium on further expansion.

Third, research suggests that on a national basis casino gambling generates externality costs in the range of $40 billion annually,³ and crime is one of the biggest components of these social costs.

Last and most important, in spite of the substantial attention devoted to the casino-crime link, there is a paucity of convincing research about it. Economists have been virtually silent, and studies from other disciplines typically exhibit many fundamental weaknesses. First, no study has examined the intertemporal effect of casinos, which we contend is essential to understanding the relationship. Second, nearly every study used small samples, most frequently Las Vegas, Atlantic City, Reno, and Deadwood (Albanese, 1985; Lee & Chelius, 1989; Friedman, Hakim, & Weinblatt, 1989; Buck, Hakim, & Spiegel, 1991; Chiricos, 1994; Margolis, 1997) or Wisconsin (Thompson, Gazel, & Rickman, 1996a; Gazel, Rickman, & Thompson, 2001), or a selection of a handful of casino markets (Albanese, 1999). Four of these studies conclude that casinos increase crime, two argue that there is no effect, and one maintains that Florida regions with casinos have lower crime rates than selected Florida tourist cities if visitors are included in the population base denominator.

Another problem with the existing research is that some studies (Albanese, 1999; Hsing, 1996) reached conclusions about crime rates without actually examining crime rates. Instead of analyzing offenses, they used arrests, but did not discuss the problems inherent in using arrest rates to infer anything definitive about crime rates.

A fourth criticism is that most studies are subject to substantial omitted variable bias because they rarely controlled for variables that affect crime. Margolis (1997), Florida Department of Law Enforcement (1994), and Florida Sheriffs Association (1994) included no control variables. Nearly all of the other studies control for very few factors.

Fifth, the literature has generally neglected discussing the theoretical links between casinos and crime, as Miller and Schwartz (1998) document in detail.

Last, many studies were agenda-driven, conducted or funded by either progambling or law enforcement organizations. Nelson, Erickson, and Langan (1996), Margolis (1997) and Albanese (1999) were funded by explicitly progambling groups. As expected, they concluded that gambling had no impact on crime. The Florida Department of Law Enforcement (1994) and Florida Sheriffs Association (1994), which both opposed casinos, concluded that crime and drunk driving increased in Atlantic City and Gulfport, MS, as a result of casinos.

The General Accounting Office (GAO) and NGISC concluded that definitive conclusions cannot yet be reached fewer P&P gamblers and less crime, then this may be better for society than a response based on taxes.

VI. Do Casinos Simply Attract Crime from Elsewhere?

The estimates suggest that after five years, 8.6% of the observed property crime and 12.6% of the violent crime in casino counties are due to casinos.²⁰ However, do casinos create crime, or merely move it from elsewhere? If the casino-induced increases in crime come only from neighboring regions, casinos produce no new crime. This untested hypothesis is first tested here. To address this question we examine the crime rates of counties that border casino counties. When casinos open, neighboring county crime rates could either decrease, remain the same, or increase. The first possibility supports the idea that casinos move crime from adjacent counties but do not create crime. In the second and third cases, adjacent counties experience no change or an increase in crime, both of which indicate that total crime rises and that casinos create crime.

²⁰ Section V C explains the computation of these numbers.

To implement a test strategy we reestimate the table 4 regressions with neighbor leads and lags as additional control variables. We define neighbor lead, opening, and lag variables, similar to those in tables 3 and 4 for the host county. The neighbor opening variable took a value of 1 if a casino opened in an adjacent county in the given year. Adjacent counties are the relevant unit of measurement, because the vast majority of casino patrons come from the local region surrounding the casino. For example, in Illinois over 92% of casino customers come from within 75 miles (Gazel & Thompson, 1996). A few casinos, mainly in Nevada, draw their customers from outside their immediate area. However, our estimates do not rely on these casinos to identify the effects, because these casinos opened prior to the beginning of our sample.

Figures 6 and 7 summarizes the estimated casino effect for neighboring and home counties for violent and property crimes, respectively. When the neighbor variables were included, the host-county crime coefficient estimates were virtually unchanged, in terms of both point estimates and statistical significance. For the years before casinos open, there is virtually no effect of the casino on crime rates in neighboring counties. Of the 42 opening and postopening coefficient estimates on the neighbor variables, 32 are positive, of which 15 are statistically significant at the 0.05 level. Of 21 estimated coefficients for lags 3–5, 18 are positive, of which 8 are individually statistically significant. None of the three negative coefficients for lags 3–5 are statistically significant. All crimes but murder display elevated and rising lags 3, 4, and 5.

For all offense types the data reject the contention that the increase in crime in the casino counties can be attributed to decreases in neighboring counties, and thus support the contention that casinos create crime. F-tests reject at the 5% level for all crimes the hypothesis that host-county opening- and lag-coefficient estimates are matched with negative estimates of equal size in neighboring counties. On the contrary, a simple correlation of host- and neighbor-county coefficient estimates for opening and lags ranges from 0.61 to 0.82, with the exception of robbery (0.14). However, there is ambiguity about the extent to which casinos increase crime in neighbor counties. Murder clearly exhibits no spillover effects. For the other offense types the neighbor time pattern is similar to the home-county time pattern. Crime typically increases in later lags, but at half or less the magnitude of the home-county effect, and many of these neighbor-county effects are not statistically significant until the very last lags. F-tests of the proposition that neighbor county coefficient estimates equal their host-county counterparts are rejected at the 5% level for aggravated assault, rape, robbery, and auto theft, but not for the other three crimes.

In our discussion of host-county auto theft rates we speculated as to why the host-county estimated coefficients displayed a different pattern of continually growing crime. This pattern of host-county coefficient estimates did not appear closely related to the introduction of casinos. However, auto theft for neighbor counties displays the pattern of crime increases observed for other crimes. There is a statistically significant, discernibly different crime rate three or more years after the opening of the neighboring casino, but not in the years before. The neighbor-county effect suggests possible spillover of auto theft crimes due to the casino.

VII. Conclusions

Our analysis of the relationship between casinos and crime is the most exhaustive ever undertaken in terms of the number of regions examined, the years covered, and the

I. INTRODUCTION

Does casino gambling increase crime? In 2006, Grinols and Mustard documented that counties that open casinos have crime rates about eight percentage points higher than their counterparts that do not open a casino.¹ They identified reasons why casinos could either raise or lower crime and estimated a total effect, which they could not disaggregate into specific causal factors.² Their finding, however, that crime rates in casino counties remain relatively stable for two or three years after casinos open and then increase over time suggests that problem gamblers, who might take a few years to gamble sufficiently to exhaust their resources and start committing crime, could play an important role.³

Although multiple studies suggest links between problem gambling and crime,⁴ there remains little firm evidence because of several substantial and continuing issues. First, research from aggregate data frequently uses partial and nonrepresentative samples.⁵ Nichols and Tosun,⁶ for example, who are interested in the long run effect of casino gambling on crime remove Nevada from their data set, exclude counties and states in other parts of the U.S., and do not examine years prior to 1984.⁷ Reliable evidence is also hard to find because many studies are agenda-driven, funded by the industry, and engaged in false reporting.⁸

Direct research to systematically investigate individual data connecting gambling behavior and criminal participation could bypass all of these problems. Where such studies have been contemplated, however, the lack of a comprehensive set of controls to allow researchers to net out other addictive characteristics

We can now perform the following armchair calculation: presume that problem gambling rises from 0.77% of the population to 3.44% when casino gambling changes from no availability to availability 105 km away as in the Quinte population. Assume also that the prevalence of crime rises from 3.54% of the population if they are nonproblem gamblers to $(3.54 + x)\%$ if they are problem gamblers, where x is between 4.28 and 7.63. Now compare the number of crime incidents for 100,000 population consisting of the appropriate proportion of problem gamblers and nonproblem gamblers in the two situations of casino availability. One finds that crime rises by 3.2% to 5.6%. A sensitivity calculation can also be performed. If the base rate estimate of problem gambling is reduced to 0.5% or raised to 1.0%, the associated ranges become (3.5-6.3) and (2.9-5.1), respectively, in each case centering somewhere in the 4% range.

We began this Article by reporting that counties that opened casinos were found to have crime rates about 8 percentage points higher than their counterparts that did not open a casino.¹⁰⁹ Collar counties in the cited study had higher crime rates by about half this rate.¹¹⁰ Since the nearest casino in the present study was 105 km distant, comparable distance-wise to a collar county, the crime effect of 3.2-5.6 percentage points should be comparable to the four percentage-point collar county estimate found earlier. The fact that it does gives some assurance of the reasonableness of the estimates.

It is a short step to derive social cost estimates, and from them policy recommendations, by finding cost figures for crime as a whole and charging 3.2% to 5.6% of this to the presence of casino gambling and associated problem gambling, where the availability matches the distances of this study.

VII. CONCLUSION

Researchers identify ten forms of gambling-related social consequences,¹¹¹ the most prominent of which is crime. Increased access to gambling lowers its cost to the user, increases the number of gamblers and raises the number of problem gamblers.¹¹²

109. See supra Part I.

110. Grinols & Mustard, supra note 1, at 26-28.

111. Crime (e.g., apprehension, adjudication, incarceration, corrections), Business and Employment Costs (e.g., lost productivity, job termination, lost work days), Bankruptcy, Illness (e.g., stress-related illness, mental illness), Suicide, Social Service Costs (e.g., welfare, treatment costs, unemployment-related costs), Regulatory Costs (e.g., government oversight expenditures), Family Costs (e.g., divorce, spousal separation, child abuse and neglect, domestic violence), Abused Dollars (e.g., money inappropriately acquired from family, friends, or employer that would be a crime but is not reported), Social Connections (e.g., reduction of social capital), Political Costs (e.g., increase in economic power resulting in disproportionate political influence). See, e.g., ANDREW H. LIETZ, JOSEPH A. FOSTER & GAIL WOLEK, NEW HAMPSHIRE GAMING STUDY COMMISSION: FINAL REPORT OF FINDINGS 48 (2010) ("Theoretically, many of these impacts have a financial cost to society one way or another and should be considered in an evaluation of the costs and benefits of expanded gambling.").

112. See id. at 45.

Our research suggests that even at a distance of 105 km to the nearest casino, problem gambling is associated with elevated crime. The estimates reported here suggest that problem gamblers commit 2.2 to 3.2 times the crime of a nonproblem gambler.¹¹³ Our estimates suggest that the availability of casino and racino gambling in the Quinte area is responsible for a 3.2-5.6 percentage point rise in crime. This agrees with our earlier work which found that crime was on the order of 8 percentage points higher in the counties themselves with operating casinos older than three to four years due to the casino presence, with elevated crime roughly half that rate in the neighboring counties.¹¹⁴ Quinte is comparable to a neighboring location.

As explained in the introduction, quality data on the effects of problem gambling is difficult to obtain and mostly nonexistent with respect to complicating “comorbid” factors.¹¹⁵ The present study provides a unique first look into the impact of this singular activity on what many view to be the most significant of gambling’s social costs. This study finds that problem gambling is linked to higher crime, its effect remains even after accounting for complicating factors, and it shows up in nonparametric as well as parametric indicators. On a preponderance of evidence basis, the conjecture that increased problem gambling leads to higher crime is confirmed in our data.

We close by touching just briefly on the policy relevance of our results. State-sponsored gambling has come to be viewed in many quarters as a tax collection device.¹¹⁶ Yet state-sponsored regulated monopolies for the purpose of raising public dollars raises policy concerns.¹¹⁷ First, such action represents a controversial insertion of the State into the private market and what has traditionally been the role of the private sphere.¹¹⁸ Second, the presence of crime effects and other social costs raises the question of whether this is the best way for government to raise revenues. To answer, one must compare the social costs of raising taxes by conventional means to the alternative “tax-by-gambling.” This Article provides information relevant to the second question.

APPENDIX: DEFINITIONS OF GAMBLING

The following definitions are from 25 U.S.C. 2703: (6)-(8):

(6) The term “class I gaming” means social games solely for prizes of minimal value or traditional forms of Indian gaming engaged in by individuals as a part of, or in connection with, tribal ceremonies or celebrations.

(7) (A) The term “class II gaming” means

(i) the game of chance commonly known as bingo (whether or not electronic, computer, or other technologic aids are used in connection therewith)

113. $(3.54+x)/3.54 = 2.2$ to 3.2 where $x = 4.28$ to 7.63 .

114. Grinols & Mustard, supra note 1, at 26–28.

115. See supra Part I.

The alternative revenue portion would include cannabis legalization and online sports betting.

I've actually been actively researching and I am currently working on an article that would outline a comprehensive plan.

The problem? There will have to be things that are politically inconvenient. Replacing $55 billion a year in state revenue is not an easy lift - and that's just eliminating property taxes for homeowners. It would be another $25 billion if we included businesses.

Some ideas that I have included in my outline beyond cannabis legalization and online sports betting are:

- Expanded tobacco and alcohol taxes
- Expanded gas tax (15 cents per gallon) - that will be a TOUGH sell
- Expanding the sales tax base without actually raising sales taxes - for instance, by taxing luxury goods that currently are not taxed (planes, luxury vehicles, jewelry valued over $5,000, private club memberships)
- public land leases and carbon tax credits

I should actually be finished with my research and my article in the next couple of days. I'll make sure to tag you when I post it.

But all of this is to say, none of this is as easy as it sounds, and Brian Harrison is full of 🤡 to make it sound like it is. Texas has relied on property taxes for far too long to just rip off that bandaid without real revenue replacement.

For decades, Jim "Mattress Mack" McIngvale has been the heartbeat of Houston.

When the floodwaters came, you opened your doors.

Thanks for reading! Subscribe for free to receive new posts and support my work.

When an ice storm turned our homes into freezers, you gave people a place to stay.

You showed us what community meant.

You have never been just a businessman. You were a neighbor. A hero.

Which is why it feels like a punch to the gut to see you now.

This week, you announced you're starting a MAGA PAC. And alongside that, you told struggling Texans that their pain comes down to one thing: they just aren't working hard enough.

Mack, this isn't leadership. It's cruelty wrapped in a folksy slogan. And it is a betrayal of everything you used to stand for.

Mack, You Were Houston's Hero. Now You're Choosing To Stand Agai...

Texans Are Working Themselves To Death

No one in Texas needs a lecture on hard work. We are a state of early mornings, long shifts, and second jobs that run late into the night.

Nurses work 12-hour hospital shifts and spend their “days off” staffing urgent care clinics. Teachers grade papers, then drive Uber until 10 PM. Single parents go from full-time job to stocking shelves overnight just to afford rent.

Right now, 8 million Americans work multiple jobs. Productivity has risen 60% since the late 70s, but wages barely moved 15%. People are giving more than ever before—and the reward for that sacrifice is bills that grow faster than their paychecks.

The truth is brutal: Americans are working harder than at any time in modern history and still falling behind.

The Cost Of Living Is Crushing People

Since 2019, Texas home prices have exploded—up 40%. Rent hikes hit people every year, eating up half their income. Health insurance premiums rise like clockwork. Childcare costs as much as a mortgage. Groceries and gas climb higher and higher.

And wages? They have barely budged.

This isn't a “lazy people” problem. This is a math problem.

You Used To Stand With Us. Now You're Standing With Them.

When you tell people to “just work harder,” you're parroting the very politicians and billionaires who built this rigged system in the first place.

You're siding with the developers who choke supply so housing prices stay sky-high. You're giving cover to the corporations that lobby to keep wages low. You're amplifying the same MAGA movement that promises working people the world and hands them nothing but tax cuts for the ultra-wealthy.

Mack, You Were Houston's Hero. Now You're Choosing To Stand Agai...

It's hard to watch someone who once stood with the people now raise a flag for a cause that grinds those same people down.

Charity Isn't A Replacement For Justice

Your generosity has saved lives, Mack. Nobody questions your heart.

But you can't charity your way out of a broken system. You can't hand out mattresses fast enough to make up for a housing market where young families can't afford a starter home. You can't feed enough people to make up for poverty wages.

You, of all people, have seen what happens when a family's safety net snaps. You've helped pick them up off the floor.

And yet now you're saying that their struggle is their own fault?

Mack, We Need You To Look Again

This is why it stings so deeply. Because you've been there when life knocks people down. You know they didn't ask for the storm.

And now, in the middle of an affordability crisis, you have chosen to throw your weight behind a MAGA PAC—a movement that has done nothing to fix these problems and everything to divide us further.

Texans are working themselves into the ground. They don't need a lecture. They need a fair chance.

We needed you to fight with us. And instead, you chose to fight against us.

Houston didn't need another billionaire telling working families to "try harder." We needed our hero back.

VS.

SARA ANN HEINEN

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF
HARRIS COUNTY, TEXAS
334 JUDICIAL DISTRICT

PLAINTIFF'S ORIGINAL PETITION

TO THE HONORABLE JUDGE OF SAID COURT:

COMES NOW, WILLIAMSBURG PARISH MAINTENANCE ASSOCIATION, "plaintiff" or "Association", complaining of SARA ANN HEINEN, "defendant", and for causes of action and grounds for relief would respectfully show the following:

I

This suit seeks relief other than that provided by TEXAS RULE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE 190.2. Therefore, discovery in this matter should be conducted under Level 2, pursuant to TEXAS RULE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE 190.3.

II

Plaintiff is a non-profit corporation, duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Texas, having its principal place of business in Houston, Harris County, Texas.

Defendant, SARA ANN HEINEN, is the owner of real property in Williamsburg Parish, a subdivision located in Harris County, Texas and may be served with process at 24119 Scrivener Lane, Katy, Texas 77493.

III

By document entitled "Declaration of Restrictions" (the "Declaration"), the original developer of the subdivision known as Williamsburg Parish, Section One (1) (the "Subdivision"), subjected each lot to certain covenants and restrictions as set forth in the Declaration. The Declaration has been duly filed and recorded under Clerk's File No. F805547 of the Real Property

VII

The Declaration further provides in Article 23, entitled Enforcement of Restrictions, at Page 11 (Exhibit C hereto), as follows:

The Board of Directors of the aforesaid Association, the owner or owners of any residential lot subject to these Restrictions, or the Developer (until all lots subject hereto have been sold or otherwise conveyed to persons or entities other than commercial homebuilders) shall all have the right to file suit for damages or for injunction, mandatory or prohibitory, to compel compliance with the provisions of these Restrictions. Also, the Board of Directors of the Association shall have the right to bring an action at law to foreclose the lien hereby established to secure the payment of the aforesaid maintenance charge if any lot owner fails to cure any such default within thirty (30) days after notice thereof from the Association. The plaintiff in any of the aforescribed proceedings shall be entitled to recover from the defendant in such action all reasonably necessary costs and expenses attendant upon bringing such action, including reasonable attorney's fee. The foregoing provision for recovery of costs, expenses and attorney's fees shall be deemed to have been agreed to by the owner(s) of any lot covered hereby by acceptance of a conveyance or other transfer of title to such lot.

VIII

Defendant has failed to pay the annual assessments and continues to remain in default despite written requests to make such payments. In accordance with the Declaration, delinquent annual assessments now due and owing as of August 1, 2004, plus interest hereinafter to accrue, amount to $331.08.

IX

Plaintiff has filed of record its Lien Claim Notice in accordance with the Declaration in the Harris County Real Property Records evidencing its lien against defendant's Lot. (Exhibit D hereto)

X

Prior to the filing of this lawsuit, defendant was requested in writing to comply with the deed restrictions above set forth. However, defendant has failed and refused, and continues to fail and refuse to do so.

XI

Defendant's violations of the provisions of the Declaration have made it necessary for plaintiff to employ the undersigned attorney to enforce its rights under the Declaration. Plaintiff has obligated itself to pay a reasonable fee for the professional services of said firm in this HUNDRED NINETEEN DOLLARS ($1,619.00), costs of court, together with post judgment interest thereon at the rate of five percent (5%) per annum from the date hereof until paid.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that plaintiff shall have foreclosure of its assessment lien as evidenced by that certain Lien Claim Notice recorded under Clerk's File No. X843525, Real Property Records of Harris County, Texas, covering the following described real property located in Harris County, Texas, to wit:

LOT FIVE (5), IN BLOCK SIX (6), OF WILLIAMSBURG PARISH, SECTION ONE (1), AN ADDITION IN HARRIS COUNTY, TEXAS, ACCORDING TO THE MAP OR PLAT THEREOF RECORDED IN VOLUME 273, PAGE 38 OF THE MAP RECORDS OF HARRIS COUNTY, TEXAS, MORE COMMONLY DESCRIBED AS 24119 SCRIVENER LANE, KATY, TEXAS 77493.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that an Order of Sale shall issue to any sheriff or constable within the State of Texas, to seize and sell the above-described property the same as under execution in satisfaction of this judgment. The sheriff or other officer executing the Order of Sale shall place the purchaser of the above-described property in possession within thirty (30) days after the date of sale. The Order of Sale shall have all the force and effect of a Writ of Possession between the parties in this action and any person claiming under the defendant by any right acquired pending this action.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that if the property cannot be found or if the proceeds of the sale are insufficient to satisfy the judgment, the sheriff or constable shall take the money or unpaid balance out of any other property of the defendant, as in the case of ordinary executions.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that if any surplus remains after the payment of the sums adjudged to be due, it shall be paid to the defendant.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that the Clerk shall forthwith, when so requested by plaintiff, WILLIAMSBURG PARISH MAINTENANCE ASSOCIATION, issue as necessary all writs and processes for the enforcement and collection of this judgment or the costs of court. All other relief not expressly granted herein is denied.

1. By executing this Agreed Order (referred to as "ORDER"), Automobile owner admits to personal liability for all tolls, fees, charges and costs, referred to as the "Delinquent Amount", on the automobile with the license plate described above (referred to as "Automobile"). This Agreement is a contract between Fort Bend County and Violator. Any breach of this contract may subject Violator to other remedies such as but not limited to a lawsuit filed against the Violator. If a lawsuit is filed, this contract alone may be the sole basis for the lawsuit. If a lawsuit is filed, then reasonable attorney fees may be assessed. Also, if a lawsuit is filed then Fort Bend County, Texas will be the venue of choice for all parties to this agreement.
2. The County, FBCTRA and its attorneys make no representation that the payments made by a person other than the actual owner of the Automobile confers on that person any right, title, or interest in the Automobile.
3. It is a breach of contract and a violation of this order not to make full monthly payment by the payment deadline each and every month.
4. Tolls, fees, charges and costs will continue to accrue for all new violations. It is a breach and a violation of this order to accrue additional toll road violations on the vehicle subject to this Agreed Order. All additional tolls, fees, charges and costs will be added to Delinquent Amount and the violator will be liable for the new amount as part of this agreement.
5. When this Agreement becomes effective, the County will agree not to place a device on the Automobile that prohibits the movement of the Automobile, add fines and court costs, and/or notify the Texas Department of Transportation to refuse registration of the Automobile, unless there is (a) failure to make a payment under this Agreement by the payment deadline or (b) breach of any other condition of this Agreement.
6. The Agreement will be completed when the Settlement Amount has been paid in full. Prior to making the final payment, contact the law firm for the exact amount owed. This Agreed Order will be presented to an Administrative Hearing Officer for approval.
7. This Agreed Order is non-transferable. All tolls, fees, charges and costs are due IN FULL upon the sale or transfer of the Automobile. It is a breach of this agreement not to notify the Fort Bend County Toll Road Authority that the Automobile subject to this Order has been sold or transferred within 30 days of the sale or transfer.
8. Make payment payable to: FORT BEND COUNTY TOLL ROAD AUTHORITY.
9. Mail payments to: Linebarger Goggan Blair & Sampson, LLP.

10. Note on payment the hearing number and license plate number.
11. Subject to approval by Attorney/Manager below, this Agreement will be effective when it is returned signed and then approved by the Administrative Hearing Officer.
12. This Agreement supercedes any and all previously executed Agreement(s).
13. It is ORDERED by the Hearing Officer that this Decision be filed with the Fort Bend County Clerk within three (3) working days of the signing of this Decision. The Fort Bend County Clerk shall keep said Decision in a separate index and file.
14. It is FURTHER ORDERED by the Hearing Officer that upon receiving said decision, the Fort Bend County Clerk shall mail a copy of said decision to Violator.

It is FURTHER ORDERED that this Decision be filed with the Fort Bend County Clerk within three (3) working days of the signing of this Decision. The Fort Bend County Clerk shall keep said Decision in a separate index and file.

It is FURTHER ORDERED that upon receiving said decision, the Fort Bend County Clerk shall mail a copy of said decision to SARA ANN MCGEE.

It is FURTHER ORDERED that if the Total Amount Due is not paid by the 31st day from the filing of this Decision with the Fort Bend County Clerk, or paid in keeping with the terms set out herein, whichever is later, the Hearing Officer automatically deems a willful failure to pay unless good cause for the failure to pay is timely presented to the Administrative Hearing Officer. Willful failure to pay will give rise to the immediate imposition of an Additional Fine of 350, which is immediately due with the Total Amount Due.

It is FURTHER ORDERED that if the Total Amount Due is not paid by the 31st day from the filing of this Decision with the Fort Bend County Clerk, or paid in keeping with the terms set out herein, whichever is later, the Texas Department of Transportation will be notified and instructed to refuse registration of the subject Motor Vehicle until such time as the Total Amount Due and all Additional Fines are paid in full.

It is FURTHER ORDERED that if the Total Amount Due is not paid by the 31st day from the filing of this Decision with the Fort Bend County Clerk, or paid in keeping with the terms set out herein, whichever is later, Fort Bend County is hereby authorized to place a device on the subject Motor Vehicle that prohibits movement of the Motor Vehicle until such time as the Total Amount Due and all Additional Fines are paid in full.

DEFAULT JUDGMENT

On this day came on for consideration Plaintiff's Motion for Entry of Default Judgment in the above-styled and numbered cause. The Court, having reviewed the records of this Court and the evidence presented by Plaintiff's Motion, FINDS that the Defendant Sara McGee, though served with Citation, have failed to answer Plaintiff's petition, that the Citation has been filed with the Court for the requisite period as provided for by the Rules, and that Plaintiff has established the amount of its damages; therefore, the Court GRANTS Plaintiff's Motion for Entry of Default Judgment.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that judgment is entered for Plaintiff Midland Funding LLC against Defendant Sara McGee in the following amounts:

Damages: $ 4,484.83

Plus all Cost of Court; for which let execution issue.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that this judgment shall accrue interest from the date hereof until satisfied, at the rate of 5.50% per annum.

THIS ORDER disposes of all issues before the court in this matter and is final for purposes of an appeal.

CITIBANK, N.A.	§
vs.	§	PRECINCT 3 OF

PLAINTIFF'S ORIGINAL PETITION

TO THE HONORABLE JUDGE OF SAID COURT:

Plaintiff, CAVALRY SPV I, LLC ASSIGNEE OF CITIBANK, N.A., complains of Defendant, Sara Heinen, and would respectfully show the following:

1. Service. Plaintiff is CAVALRY SPV I, LLC ASSIGNEE OF CITIBANK, N.A., whose business address is 500 Summit Lake Drive Suite 400, Valhalla NY 10595. Plaintiff may be contacted through its undersigned attorney of record, as identified below. Defendant may be served at 2726 Empire Oaks Ln, Katy TX 77494-5549. Defendant's phone number is unavailable. Plaintiff does not consent to service of the answer and other motions or pleadings by email.

2. Discovery. Plaintiff intends that discovery be conducted under Rule 500.9.

3. Venue. Venue of this action is proper in the county named above because Sara Heinen is an individual believed to be residing in said county at the time of commencement of suit.

4. Facts. On May 09, 2012, Defendant entered into an agreement(s) (the "Contract(s)") with Citibank, N.A. or a predecessor in interest bearing account number(s) XXXXXXXXXXXX8632 at the time it was maintained with Citibank, N.A.. Defendant defaulted on the obligation to make payment due on the Contract. The debt was charged off on July 11, 2018 and interest has not been charged after that date. Plaintiff was assigned the Contract on 12/27/2019 by Citibank, N.A. and is legal owner of the debt. Citibank, N.A. was the prior holder of the debt. Plaintiff gave all notices required by the laws of this state, and demanded payment from the Defendant; however, Defendant did not pay the balance due. The entire balance of the Contract is now due and payable in full. Plaintiff is entitled to judgment for $3,170.26, the balance due under the Contract on the charge-off date. Plaintiff does not seek post charge-off interest prior to judgment.

5. Account Stated. Pleading in the alternative, Plaintiff alleges that Defendant is liable under the common law account stated cause of action. Defendant made charges on the account for goods and services, rendered at the special instance and request of Defendant and in the regular course of business. Statements of the account's balance were routinely sent to Defendant. Defendant made no known objection to any of these charges and is believed to have authorized all charges on the account.

6. Conditions Precedent. Through its undersigned attorney, Plaintiff has demanded payment from Defendant, but Defendant has not satisfied such demand. Plaintiff has performed all conditions precedent to the filing of this action, or all such conditions precedent have occurred.

7. Attorney's Fees. Plaintiff is entitled to recover reasonable attorney's fees and court costs for the pursuit of this action. Such amount is subject to determination by the Court, and Plaintiff requests that the Court award attorney's fees in the amount that it determines to be reasonable in this action together with all taxable costs.

8. Prayer. WHEREFORE, premises considered, Plaintiff prays that Defendant be summoned to appear and answer, and that upon final hearing, Plaintiff have judgment against Defendant for:

- a. $3,170.26, the balance due on the date of charge-off;
- b. post-judgment interest at the maximum rate allowed by law;
- c. attorney's fees in the amount determined by the Court to be reasonable;
- d. all costs of court; and
- e. all such other and further relief, to which Plaintiff may be justly entitled.

FINAL DEFAULT JUDGMENT

On this day came on to be heard the above numbered and titled cause, and came the Plaintiff through its attorney of records, and the Defendant, though duly cited to appear and answer herein, came not but wholly made default; and the Court find that the citation has been duly served and returned for the time and in the manner prescribed by law; and it appearing to the Court that the Plaintiff is entitled to prevail and is entitled to relief sought in Plaintiff's Original Petition; and that the amount sued upon is due and owing; and that this Court has jurisdiction and venue over this cause;

IT IS THEREFORE, ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that CAVALRY SPV I, LLC ASSIGNEE OF CITIBANK, N.A., do have and recover of and from the Defendant, Sara Heinen, the sum of $3,170.26; and that Plaintiff recover its costs of suit, plus interest on said sums at the rate of 5.00% on the total amount of the judgment from the date of judgment until paid; and that Plaintiff have its execution therefore.

The Court denies all relief not expressly granted in this judgment. Additionally, this judgment is a final judgment as to all claims and all parties.

If Paxton +10 is what my state has become, then I no longer belong in this state.

On the record - if Ken "pedophile plea deal" Paxton wins Texas by a +10 margin, then I will find a place in America, or possibly abroad, where the electorate still has an ounce of common decency.

I'd be absolutely flabbergasted if Paxton loses statewide, but I doubt he wins by a massive amount either.

A Texas Democrat already has an exit plan if Ken Paxton wins in November

By Ahmed Humble

Article Text:

Ken Paxton's runoff victory is already sending shockwaves through Texas politics—and now it's sparked an eye-catching reaction from one Democratic candidate who says she may leave the state altogether if the GOP nominee wins big in November.

RELATED: Ken Paxton defeats John Cornyn in Texas GOP Senate showdown

Sara McGee, the Democrat nominee running for Texas House District 132, which covers Katy and part of Cy-Fair, is running against Republican incumbent Mike Schofield.

At the center of the controversy is Ken Paxton's recent runoff victory for the Republican nominee. Just days before voters selected Paxton over incumbent Sen. John Cornyn in the Republican runoff, McGee posted what she described as her "exit strategy" if Paxton ultimately wins the Senate seat in November.

"On the record - If Ken 'pedophile plea deal' Paxton wins Texas by a +10 margin, then I will find a place in America, or possibly abroad, where the electorate still has an ounce of common decency," she said in a post on X. "

RELATED: John Cornyn humiliated himself to save his political career. It's over anyway.

McGee later clarified in a reply to another user on X that she was referring to both the runoff and the general election, effectively doubling down on her frustration with the state's political direction.

During a phone call with Chron, McGee noted her plans are also contingent on the outcome of her race.

"If I win my election, I'm absolutely staying here to represent my community," she said. "That's the only thing that could possibly change Texas, and we especially need to try to get the majority in the Texas House, because you know they're going to redistrict again after the recent Voting Rights Act ruling."

"Quitting is not an option," McGee added.

Her subsequent X posts continued criticizing both Paxton and Cornyn while expressing support for Talarico.

"John Cornyn sold his soul to MAGA. Ken Paxton never had a soul to begin with," McGee said in a separate post on X. "It's Talarico or bust here in Texas."

With Paxton now officially securing the Republican nomination, only time will tell if McGee will follow through on her comments.

"My blessing, and my curse is the fact that I'm not a politician; I'm doing this because I have a real true desire to truly represent my community," she concluded in her conversation with Chron. "My whole thing is during this campaign, I'm just gonna be me, and if I win my election, great, if I don't, then, like I said, maybe that's why it's my blessing and my curse."

Schofield's office did not immediately respond to Chron's requests for comment.

As someone who never closes open tabs on my phone, my immediate post-election emotional journey was fairly well documented here. 🤪

In order:

1. Oh no
2. I'm leaving
3. This sucks
4. And then finally - I'm taking my state back!

I've settled into the last tab quite comfortably at this point.

But wait. There's more. I filed for divorce because my ex beat me to the point of hospitalization when I was pregnant with our daughter.

Ken Paxton's wife filed for divorce on biblical grounds because she was tired of being publicly humiliated by his constant affairs.

Of all the "we are not the same" posts, this qualifies as we are absolutely not the same-sest.

Marriages break up.

Ken Paxton destroyed his because he is the skeeziest politician to grace the halls of the Texas Legislature and thought that the "red till I'm dead" army would protect him.

And then he ran for the Senate.

At the time of the marriage, I did not know of the Respondent's mental disease or defect and I have not voluntarily lived with the Respondent since I discovered the Respondent's mental disease or defect.
- ☐ Respondent concealed a divorce that took place within the 30 day period before the marriage ceremony. At the time of the marriage ceremony I did not know about the divorce and I have not lived with the Respondent since I found out about the divorce. It has been less than 1 year since the marriage occurred.
- ☐ The Respondent and I were married less than 72 hours after the marriage license was issued. A court did not sign an order waiving the 72 hour waiting period and none of the exceptions set out in Texas Family Code Section 2.204 (b) apply. (At the time of the marriage, I was not a member of the U.S. armed forces on active duty, I did not perform work for the U.S. Department of Defense as an employee or under a contract with the Department, and I did not seek a waiver based upon completion of a premarital course as set out in Section 2.204 (b) (4).) And, it has been less than 30 days since the marriage took place.

5. No Child of Marriage

No child was born or adopted during our marriage and none is expected.

6. Property

No community property was accumulated by the parties during the marriage other than personal effects, which should be awarded to the person having possession.

ORIGINAL PETITION FOR DIVORCE

1. Discovery Level

Discovery in this case is intended to be conducted under level 1 of rule 190 of the Texas Rules of Civil Procedure. No children are involved in this divorce case, and the value of the marital estate is more than zero but not more than $250,000.

2. Parties

This suit is brought by Sara Ann McGee, Petitioner.

Ryan Keith Reed is Respondent.

3. Domicile

Petitioner has been a domiciliary of Texas for the preceding six-month period and a resident of this county for the preceding ninety-day period.

4. Service

No service on Respondent is necessary at this time. Petitioner believes Respondent will execute a Waiver of Service. If Respondent fails to execute the Waiver of Service, process should be served wherever Respondent may be found.

5. Protective Order Statement

No protective order under title 4 of the Texas Family Code, protective order under subchapter A of chapter 7B of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure, or order for emergency protection under Article 17.292 of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure is in effect in regard to a party to this suit and no application for any such order is pending.

6. Dates of Marriage and Separation

The parties were married on or about March 3, 2021 and ceased to live together as spouses on or about November 29, 2022.

7. Grounds for Divorce

The marriage has become insupportable because of discord or conflict of personalities between Petitioner and Respondent that destroys the legitimate ends of the marriage relationship and prevents any reasonable expectation of reconciliation.

8. Children of the Marriage

There is no child born or adopted of this marriage, and none is expected.

9. Division of Community Property

Petitioner believes Petitioner and Respondent will enter into an agreement for the division of their estate. If such an agreement is made, Petitioner requests the Court to approve the agreement and divide their estate in a manner consistent with the agreement. If such an agreement is not made, Petitioner requests the Court to divide their estate in a manner that the Court deems just and right, as provided by law.

10. Prayer

Petitioner prays that citation and notice issue as required by law and that the Court grant a divorce and all other relief requested in this petition.

Petitioner prays for general relief.

Respectfully submitted,

Class A misdemeanor. The Defendant is adjudged to be guilty of a Class A misdemeanor and is assessed the punishment indicated above.

This cause being called for trial, in Harris County, Texas, unless otherwise referenced, the State appeared by her District Attorney as named above and the Defendant named above appeared in person with Counsel as named above; or the Defendant knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waived the right to representation by counsel as indicated above in writing in open court, and both parties announced ready for trial. The Defendant waived his right of trial by jury, and pleaded as indicated above. Thereupon, the Defendant was admonished by the Court as required by law. It appearing to the Court that the Defendant is mentally competent to stand trial, that the plea is freely and voluntarily made, and that the Defendant is aware of the consequences of his plea; the plea is hereby received by the Court and entered of record. The Court having heard the evidence submitted found the Defendant guilty of the offense indicated above. The Defendant was granted the right of allocution and answered nothing in bar thereof. The Court proceeded in the presence of the Defendant to pronounce sentence against the Defendant.

IT IS ORDERED AND ADJUDGED by the Court that the Defendant is guilty of the offense indicated above, and that the Defendant committed the offense on the date indicated above, and that the Defendant be punished as indicated above for the period indicated above, and that the State of Texas do have and recover of the Defendant all costs of the prosecution for which execution will issue. Further, the Court finds the Presentence Investigation, if so ordered, was done according to the applicable provisions of Art. 42.12, Sec. 9, Code of Criminal Procedure.

IT IS ORDERED by the Court that if the punishment assessed against the Defendant is confinement in the Institutional Division or the State Jail Division of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice (TDCJ) that the Defendant be delivered by the Sheriff of Harris County, Texas immediately to the Director of the Institutional Division or the State Jail Division, TDCJ, or any other person legally authorized to receive such convicts, and said Defendant shall be confined in the Institutional Division or State Jail Division, TDCJ for the period indicated above, in accordance with the provisions of the law governing the Institutional Division or State Jail Division, TDCJ. The Defendant is remanded to the custody of the Sheriff of Harris County until said Sheriff can obey the directions of this sentence.

IT IS ORDERED by the Court that if the punishment assessed against the Defendant is confinement in the Harris County Jail that the Defendant is remanded to the custody of the Sheriff of Harris County, Texas; unless the Defendant is instructed to voluntarily surrender to the Sheriff on the date the sentence is to begin, as indicated above. The Sheriff shall confine the Defendant in the Harris County Jail as required by law.

IT IS ORDERED by the Court that if the punishment assessed against the defendant is for a fine only, the Defendant is ordered to immediately proceed to the Office of the Harris County Sheriff and pay all fine and court costs as ordered by the Court in this cause; unless the Court orders the Defendant to be committed to the custody of the Sheriff of Harris County, Texas on the date the sentence is to begin, as indicated above, to be confined in the Harris County Jail until the fine and costs are fully satisfied in accordance with law; or as indicated above.

IT IS ORDERED by the Court that the sentence indicated above is to be executed, unless it is indicated above that the sentence is to be suspended, and if so, the Defendant is placed on community supervision for the period indicated above pending his abiding by and not violating the terms and conditions of his community supervision.

IT IS ORDERED by the Court that this sentence runs concurrent with any other sentence(s) unless it is indicated on the Judgment Addendum that the sentence is to run cumulatively.
